Nor doth this fear work only upon baſe and cowardly ſpirits, but upon thoſe alſo that have the reputation of the moſt brave. He that can undauntedly mount a breach, and advance to the mouth of a cannon, yet hath not courage enough to be ſober amongſt the intemperate, or to refuſe a challenge. Nay, thoſe very perſons who have not been afraid at the frowns of a prince, but have been content to loſe all they had, rather than to abjure their religion at his command, yet have been known to live in direct oppoſition to it, rather than by being ſingular to diſoblige thoſe with whom they have converſed. This compliance with ſinful practices, in order to pleaſe ſinners, borroweth the diſguiſe of ſeveral good qualities, and puts on very plauſible names. When one who gives himſelf a latitude in living, would prevail with us to do as he doth, he calls this good nature: To fall in with all the modiſh vices of the age, is ſtiled good breeding; and thoſe who would perſwade others to run into the ſame exceſs of riot, as they allow themſelves in, term this good fellowſhip. That indifference to all religions, and all communions, which is deſervedly odious, when it is called by its own true name of luke-warmneſs, muſt be recommended under the more ſpecious title of temper and moderation: And that atheiſm and infidelity, which would fright people from being proſelytes thereto, if they were directly propoſed as ſuch, muſt, in order to gain converts, borrow the gentler appellation of free-thinking, and diveſting ourſelves of the prejudices of education. The more frequent this vicious compliance is, and the more ſpecious appearances it carries, the more we ought to be upon our guard againſt it, as knowing it is too great a ſtrain of complaiſance to commit ſin, rather than to do what they call a rude thing. And we carry the compliment too far, when we pleaſe men at the expence of our own everlaſting ſalvation.

But though we ought not to pleaſe men by doing any thing which may endanger their ſouls, or our own, yet there are other caſes, wherein it is not only lawful, but our bounden duty to pleaſe men, ſince in theſe the pleaſing of men is one part of that duty, which we owe to our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. For,

What men ought to be pleaſed with, that we ought to do, that men may be pleaſed therewith.

Since God's will is the rule of man's, whatever actions are agreeable to the laws of God, ought to be pleaſing to men; and as men ought to be pleaſed, when God's name is glorified by the performance of his will, ſo ought they to promote the pleaſure of each other, by the mutual obſervance of his commandments. Good men are juſtly pleaſed, when the laws of God are kept, and his name is honoured. This pleaſure they have a good right and title to; and that they may have frequent opportunities of exerciſing it, Our light ought ſo to ſhine before theſe righteous perſons, that ſeeing theſe our good works, they may be pleaſed, and glorify our Father which is in Heaven. I do not ſay, that we ought to perform good actions only that we may pleaſe men; for if they be done barely for this end, they commence bad actions; and ſuch as good men, if they are aware that they proceed from this bad principle, ought not to be pleaſed with. But ſince God hath annext praiſe and eſteem to virtuous actions, which, as they are pleaſing to him, ſo they procure us alſo the good will of men; ſuch actions as theſe, are not leſs, but more our duty, for being amiable and pleaſing. Whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, any praiſe, our Apoſtle, commands us to think on ſuch things. We are not to think of theſe only, becauſe they procure us love, reputation, and praiſe; but becauſe being juſt, pure, and virtuous, they are ſuch as ought to be beloved, eſteemed and praiſed. This love, eſteem, and praiſe, were they ſeparated from juſtice, purity, and virtue, ought not be aimed at by us. But ſince the pleaſing of men naturally ariſes from our performance of ſuch laudable actions, we muſt, by the doing theſe, contribute to the pleaſure of godly men.

This rule will not only warrant us, but oblige us to pleaſe good men, by keeping all the laws of God. And becauſe all men, whether they are or not, yet ought to be pleaſed with what tends to the honour of religion, to the good of men's ſouls, and to the publick peace, it will be our duty to endeavour the pleaſing of men, in order to promote theſe great ends. And, 1ſt, We muſt pleaſe men, that we may thereby promote the honour of our religion. Some men miſtake ill-nature for a certain ſign of grace, and think they are not ſuch as they ought to be, unleſs in every thing they are ſingular. To hate the world, and to be hated by it, is, in their opinion, the duty and lot of all Chriſt's diſciples, and they are apt to ſuſpect themſelves, if others think well of them, or are pleaſed with any thing they do. Hence, in the whole conduct of their lives, they take a great delight to thwart and to croſs others. By a rude and churliſh behaviour, they declare an open defiance to mankind, and think they can never pleaſe God, but by diſpleaſing men. This ſowre and rugged temper of ſome men, who pretend to be good Chriſtians, purely becauſe they are not like other men, and who exclude all ſuch from being religious, who are not like themſelves, brings a great ſcandal on that faith which they profeſs, and by this malignancy of ſpirit diſparage. For ſweetneſs of nature, and an obliging deportment, have a good title to, and are in preſent poſſeſſion of, a very fair reputation in all civilized parts of the world; ſo that religion muſt needs ſuffer much in the opinions of men, if it ſhould be thought to countenance ill-nature and ill-breeding. Courteouſneſs and affability, meekneſs and deference to others, have had a place amongſt moral virtues, in all the ſchemes of duty that have yet appeared in the world. And it would be a great reproach on the Goſpel, to ſuppoſe that we muſt put off all humanity, before we can commence good Chriſtians.

There are indeed ſeveral things, wherein it is unlawful for us to comply with the cuſtoms of the world; but the more we are bound up in theſe caſes, the more cautious we ought to be in other things not to be ſtiff and humourſome. If in ſome things we are forced to be ſingular, becauſe our Holy Religion will not permit us to do as others do; the beſt way to convince mankind, that this proceeds not from frowardneſs, and that we do not take delight to oppoſe others, will be by ſhewing a ready compliance, and a ſincere deſire to pleaſe, where we have a greater ſcope, and where the laws of God are ſo far from forbidding us, that they oblige us to comply.

This endeavour to pleaſe men, will free our religion from the ſcandal of ſowring men's tempers, of rendring them moroſe and unſociable, ſullen and perverſe, ill-natured and untractable, which are qualities of ſo odious a character, that a religion which ſhould ſeem to inſpire them, would be thought very improper for perſons of good nature, and ingenious education; that is, for the very beſt part of mankind to be governed by. And as we ought thus to pleaſe men, in order to vindicate the honour of our religion. So, 2dly, We ought to pleaſe men, in order to promote the ſpiritual good of their ſouls.

When our Apoſtle lays down this general precept, Let every one pleaſe his neighbour, he immediately ſubjoins to what end this pleaſing of our neighbour ought to be directed, i. e. For his good to edification. This, as it is the end which he recommends to others to purſue, ſo was it the ſcope to which his own endeavours to pleaſe, were conſtantly directed. I pleaſe men, ſaith he, in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they might be ſaved. This was the reaſon of his eaſy compliance, and adapting himſelf to the ſeveral tempers and humours of thoſe he converſed with: If he was a ſervant unto all men, it was that he might gain the more: Unto the Jews he became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jew: To them that were under the law, as under the law, that he might gain them under the law: To them that were without law, as without law, that he might gain them that were without law; to the weak, he became as weak, that he might gain the weak; and was made all things, to all men, that he might by all means ſave ſome. For

Our Apoſtle, who was perfectly well ſkilled in all the arts of Divine Oratory, underſtood very well how neceſſary it is, in order to convincing men's judgments, and influencing their actions, to be firſt of all maſter of their affections. If we would have men come in eaſily to our opinions, and be governed by our counſels, we muſt take care ſo to demean ourſelves, that they may be pleaſed with us, and have an eſteem for our perſons.

It will be difficult to convince any, that we may have an earneſt zeal for the good of their ſouls, and a paſſionate deſire to promote their eternal welfare, if at the ſame time we do any thing which may juſtly offend and diſquiet them, and make their preſent condition uneaſy and unpleaſant. He who pretends to adviſe and direct another, challengeth ſome ſort of ſuperiority over him; which the pride that is natural to all men, makes them very difficultly bear; it is neceſſary therefore, that he ſhould temper his advice with a mixture of ſweetneſs, and take care, that his demeanour be ſuch, as may prepare the mind of his diſciple to ſubmit more willingly to his direction.

Thoſe wholſome inſtructions, which charity requires us to give to our brethren, are generally ſuch, as in their own nature are not very grateful and pleaſing to the depraved appetites of men. To make them therefore the more acceptable, and that they may be the better reliſhed, they muſt be ſet off with an air of pleaſantneſs; and what of itſelf is diſtaſteful, muſt have its bitterneſs diſſembled, that it may be the eaſier taken down, and convey health to the diſtemper'd ſoul. Hence

The wiſdom of the ancients thought it proper to couch the ſevere precepts of morality under the pleaſantneſs of fable; they cloathed their notions of philoſophy and the ſober dictates of right reaſon, in the gayeſt dreſs that poetry could furniſh; and took care to pleaſe the fancies of their hearers, that by theſe means they might inſinuate themſelves into their good eſteem; and by pleaſing, might profit them. And our Saviour, in condeſcenſion to the infirmities of men, hath vouchſafed to uſe, and by his uſing hath ſanctified this method of inſtruction. He hath delivered the doctrines of the Goſpel in the delightful ſtyle of parables, which in their firſt and literal meaning are fitted to entertain and to divert the hearer, and ſo to prepare his mind for the reception of thoſe practical truths, which are concealed under them, and conveyed by them. Now ſince Chriſtian charity obligeth us to ſeek the ſpiritual good of others, and experience ſheweth us, how naturally eſteem or diſeſteem, approbation or diſlike, paſs from perſons to doctrines, that our endeavours to promote the ſpiritual welfare of our brethren may have the better effect, we ought to ſtudy the pleaſing thoſe, whom without pleaſing we cannot profit; to this end our Apoſtle made it his utmoſt care to pleaſe men, and by thus pleaſing them, did the office of an Apoſtle or ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt. And as the private intereſt of our neighbour is a good end of endeavouring to pleaſe. So,

3dly, We muſt endeavour to pleaſe others, in order to promote the publick peace. We are commanded to follow peace with all men; and becauſe there are ſome proper means of attaining this end, we are alſo obliged to follow after the things which make for peace. All thoſe words and actions, which have any influence towards the eſtabliſhing an amicable correſpondence amongſt our Fellow-Chriſtians, are, by virtue of this precept, matter of ſtrict duty; and all, which have the leaſt tendency to diſquiet the minds of our brethren, are, by force of the ſame precept, utterly unlawful. Now,

If we cloſely obſerve the origin of all quarrels, we ſhall find, that they ariſe from the diſpleaſure we conceive one againſt another. We may perceive by ourſelves, how nicely tender ſelf-love is; how deſirous we are, that every one ſhould do what we like; and how we are preſently upon the alarm, if any one betrays the leaſt ſlight of us, by doing what is diſpleaſing to us: We may be ſure this ſelf-love is planted as deeply, and works as ſtrongly in other men, as in us: They are as much addicted to their own humours, as we are to ours; and love as little to be thwarted in them as we do: If therefore we are ſenſible how quick and ſevere our own reſentments are, when any thing is done which offends us, if we would not awaken the ſame reſentments in others, we muſt be careful not to do any thing which may juſtly diſpleaſe them. We all naturally deſire to be pleaſed, but if each ſhould conſtantly follow his own humour, we ſhall mutually interfere one with another.

The beſt way to provide for our own ſatisfaction, and the publick peace, will be to gratify each other; to procure the courteſy of others, by complaiſance towards them, and by a mutual commerce of the offices of humanity to keep up that good order, which, upon the leaſt failure of theſe duties, is preſently diſturbed. That inward peace which conſiſt in unity of mind, and agreement of judgment, is rather to be wiſhed, than hoped for, in a perverſe generation: But even then, when we cannot come up to this happy ſtate, we may preſerve that outward quiet, which conſiſts in the reciprocal diſcharge of all the duties of civility. This tender care how we diſpleaſe others, as it procures their good will to us, ſo it keeps alive ours to them: For ſince it is difficult to have a warmth for any, in whom we perceive a coolneſs towards us, the ſame actions of ours, which create an averſeneſs in them, will by degrees extinguiſh in our minds that charity, which ought always to be active in us towards our Chriſtian brethren. The reconciling of differences, when they are come to full growth, and the reſtoring of peace, where it hath been long broken, are attended with ſo many difficulties, that they ſeldom prove ſucceſsful. It will be much eaſier by pleaſing each other, to ſuppreſs this evil in its firſt riſe, to prevent its birth, and to hinder its conception. The beginning of ſtrife, is as the letting out of water, which, having once paſt its banks, ſpreads itſelf to a vaſt extent, but might, by a moderate care at firſt, have been kept within its due compaſs. Now,

Since all thoſe quarrels, which diſturb that mutual concord that ought to be amongſt all Chriſtians, have their firſt riſe from ſome miſunderſtandings betwixt them; ſince theſe ariſe from our diſobliging each other by words or actions not pleaſing; to prevent theſe miſchiefs, and to preſerve that brotherly love, which is the peculiar duty and character of Chriſtians, we are obliged to endeavour the pleaſing of each other. Glory to God, peace on earth, and good-will towards men, are the great ends of the Goſpel: Since therefore by pleaſing men, we may promote the honour of our religion, the publick peace, and the ſalvation of each other, to pleaſe men, in order to theſe good ends, is to acquit ourſelves faithful ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt.

But though in theſe things we ought to pleaſe men, yet we muſt not reſt here: The pleaſing of men muſt not be the chief reaſon and ultimate end even of our good actions. For, he who is governed by no better a principle than this, acts by a very unſteady, inſufficient, dangerous, and falſe rule.

Thoſe actions can never be uniform, which are directed by a rule capable of change: So that there muſt neceſſarily be a great deal of uncertainty and variety in that man's actions, who adapts all he doth to the pleaſing of men. For what ſome men are pleaſed with, will be diſpleaſing to others; and here he will be at a loſs, how to determine himſelf, ſince the danger of diſappointment is equal to the hopes of ſucceſs. Nay, ſo inconſtant are the minds of men; ſo mutable their intereſts, and with them their inclinations, that the ſame actions do not always pleaſe the ſame man: So that were we to govern our lives according to any one man's pleaſure, we ſhould never be able by any art to hit the mark, which conſtantly wavers.

But were this rule of acting more fixed than it is, yet ſtill it would prove inſufficient: for there are ſeveral degrees and inſtances of duty, to which it would not extend. Actions in themſelves very faulty, and which want many of thoſe circumſtances which are neceſſary to make them truly good, may yet by a fair out-ſide chance to pleaſe men; ſo that ſuch a principle of acting, would rather miniſter to oſtentation, than make us ſincerely virtuous. There are many actions, which we are ſtrictly bound to, which in ſome times and circumſtances may not be pleaſing to thoſe, whoſe eſteem of us we moſt value: and ſuch as theſe we ſhall very unwillingly venture on, if our utmoſt aim in doing well, is to pleaſe men. There are moreover ſeveral acts of charity and devotion to be done in private, and thoſe men cannot be pleaſed with, becauſe they are induſtriouſly hidden from them; which therefore are in great danger of being omitted by thoſe, who look not beyond the eſteem of men.

Nor is this only an inexpedient and defective, but alſo a dangerous and unſafe rule. If an endeavour to pleaſe men, is the main ſpring of our motion towards good; if their love and eſteem, their applauſe and approbation, ſeem to us bleſſings of that importance, that we cannot be eaſy or happy without them, and therefore incite us ſtrongly to the performance of thoſe good actions, by which they are ſometimes to be attained; we are in great danger of being tempted to evil alſo, when the pleaſure of men, of which we are ſo fond, is no otherways to be procured. For he who performs good actions only to pleaſe men, doth not chooſe theſe, as they are virtuous, but as they are pleaſing and agreeable; ſo that if evil actions ſhall appear to tend equally, or more, to the end he aims at, he will be by this principle equally or more inclined to thoſe. But though this wrong biaſs on the ſoul ſhould not carry it ſo far as to comply with what is confeſſedly and notoriouſly evil, yet it will make us apt to entertain a favourable opinion of all actions, which miniſter to an end we ſo eagerly purſue: it will make us at firſt wiſh them lawful, and at laſt by eaſy degrees, we ſhall paſs on to eſteem them ſuch.

But after all, the chief and true reaſon why we ſhould not make the praiſe of men the rule of our actions, is becauſe it is a falſe one. It is not that rule by which we ought to live, becauſe it is not that by which we ſhall be finally judged. God hath not only required, that we ſhould perform ſuch and ſuch preſcribed actions, but that we ſhould do them out of a true ſenſe of our duty to him, and entire regard to his law. At the laſt day, when our few good actions ſhall be ſet againſt our numberleſs ſins, thoſe which were done barely to pleaſe men, ſhall not come into account with the former. Actions done to pleaſe men only, can expect no reward but from men: but if the pleaſing of God be the ſcope of all our actions, we have a fair proſpect of a reward from the hands of God. We muſt therefore in all things act, not as men-pleaſers, but as the ſervants of Chriſt, doing the will of God from the heart, with good will doing ſervice as to the Lord, and not to men; knowing that whatſoever good thing any man doth, upon this good principle, the ſame he ſhall receive of the Lord, in the great day of retribution.

Ver. 6. Nor of men ſought we glory, &c.] See the preceding note on verſe 4.

—— We might have been burdenſome.] Or, uſed authority, as the original has it, and agreeable to the antitheſis of the next verſe, But we were gentle among you, &c.

Ver. 8. But alſo our own ſouls.] See 2 Cor. xii. 15, i. e. We are ready to ſpend our ſtrength, and lay down our lives for your advantage, and that we might not be chargeable unto any of you; ſee the next verſe.

Ver. 14. —— Ye alſo have ſuffered like things of your own countrymen.] See Acts xvii. 5—13.

Ver. 15. — Have perſecuted.] Or, chaſed us out from our own country.

—— They pleaſe not God.] See the notes on ver. 4.

Ver. 16. Forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles.] See Acts xiii. 50. xiv. 5, 19. xvii. 5, 13. xviii. 12. and xix. 9.

—— The wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt.] See Matt. xxiv. 6, 14.

Ver. 18. — Satan hindred us.] By the hands of wicked men, who being the inſtruments of Satan perſecute us, and endeavour to ſtop the progreſs of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

CHAP. III.

1 Saint Paul teſtifieth his great love to the Theſſalonians, partly by ſending Timothy unto them to ſtrengthen and comfort them, partly by rejoicing in their well-doing: 10 and partly by praying for them, and deſiring a ſafe coming unto them.

WHerefore when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone:

2 And ſent Timotheus, our brother and miniſter of God, and our fellow-labourer in the goſpel of Chriſt, to eſtabliſh you, and to comfort you concerning your faith;

3 That no man ſhould be moved by theſe afflictions: for your ſelves know that we are appointed thereunto.

4 For verily when we were with you, we told you before, that we ſhould ſuffer tribulation; even as it came to paſs, and ye know.

5 For this cauſe, when I could no longer forbear, I ſent to know your faith, leſt by ſome means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

6 But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, deſiring greatly to ſee us, as we alſo to ſee you:

7 Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and diſtreſs by your faith:

8 For now we live, if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord.

9 For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your ſakes before our God.

10 Night and day praying exceedingly that we might ſee your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himſelf and our Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt direct our way unto you.

12 And the Lord make you to increaſe and abound in love one towards another, and towards all men, even as we do towards you:

13 To the end he may ſtabliſh your hearts unblameable in holineſs before God even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt with all his ſaints.

This chapter contains farther evidences and demonſtrations of the Apoſtle's great love to them; viz.

I. His ſending Timothy to them; wherein the inward moving cauſe, or his great love is ſhewn, ſo that he could not longer forbear, though by ſending of Timothy he was left alone; yet he could put up with that inconveniency, for their eſtabliſhment and comfort; ver. 1, 2.

All which he amplifies by ſhewing what occaſion he apprehended there might be for their eſtabliſhment and comfort at that time, leſt they ſhould be withdrawn, or ſtagger at the report of his afflictions; againſt which therefore he arms them by two conſiderations, (1) God's appointment, which ſhould be ſubmitted unto, as they were ſenſible; ver. 3. and (2) his foretelling them of it, whereby they came to know it. It was no more than they were forewarned of, and taught to expect; verified by the anſwerable event; ver. 4. And

Then he tells them alſo that another reaſon why he ſent Timothy, was, that he might have a true account of their faith; ver. 5.

II. His rejoicing at the good news Timothy brought at his return. Wherein we find,

(1) Timothy's return.

(2) The report he makes of the graces of God in them, viz. Faith, love, and of a ſpecial love to Paul, manifeſted by theſe effects, their remembrance of him, and their deſire to ſee him; amplified by a reciprocal deſire in him; ver. 6.

(3) The effects of this in the Apoſtle, as comfort; ver. 7. proved by chearfulneſs; with another ground thereof, their ſtedfaſtneſs; ver. 8. and his unexpreſſible thankfulneſs to God, and joy in this reſpect; ver. 9.

(4) Conſtant fervent prayer; concerning which is ſhewn the matter thereof, to ſee them; and his end therein, to perfect their faith; ver. 10.

III. A fervent prayer; wherein we are to obſerve that God and Chriſt are the object; and the matter is, that he might obtain a proſperous journey to them; ver. 11. and that their love might increaſe and abound, inforced from his own example; ver. 12. That ſo they might be eſtabliſhed in holineſs, and be pacified in their hearts and conſciences; ver. 13.

Ver. 1.—We thought it good to be left at Athens alone.] See Acts xvii. 15.

Ver. 2. Timotheus.] Or, Timothy; ſee the introduction to the firſt Epiſtle to Timothy, and Rom. xvi. 21.

Ver. 3—By theſe Afflictions.] Or, perſecutions which Paul and the other Apoſtles underwent at Athens and other places, for the ſake of the Goſpel; ſee Acts xiv. 22. and 1 Cor. iv. 9. 2 Tim. iii. 12. 1 Pet. ii. 21.

Ver. 5.—The tempter.] Satan

Ver. 8. For now we live.] Ye give us new life and ſpirits.

CHAP. IV.

1 He exhorteth them to go on forward in all manner of godlineſs, 6 to live holily and juſtly, 9 to love one another, 11 and quietly to follow their own buſineſs: 13 and laſt of all to ſorrow moderately for the dead. 17 And unto this laſt exhortation is annexed a brief deſcription of the reſurrection, and ſecond coming of Chriſt to judgment.

FUrthermore then we beſeech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jeſus, that as ye have received of us how you ought to walk, and to pleaſe God, ſo ye would abound more and more.

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jeſus.

3 For this is the will of God, even your ſanctification, that ye ſhould abſtain from fornication:

4 That every one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſs his veſſel in ſanctification and honour;

5 Not in the luſt of concupiſcence, even as the Gentiles which know not God:

6 That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter: becauſe that the Lord is the avenger of all ſuch, as we alſo have forewarned you, and teſtified.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanneſs, but unto holineſs.

8 He therefore that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not man, but God, who hath alſo given unto us his holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you: for ye your ſelves are taught of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do it towards all the brethren, which are in all Macedonia: but we beſeech you, brethren, that ye increaſe more and more;

11 And that ye ſtudy to be quiet, and to do your own buſineſs, and to work with your own hands (as we commanded you)

12 That ye may walk honeſtly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing.

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are aſleep, that ye ſorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For if we believe that Jeſus died, and roſe again, even ſo them alſo which ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him.

15 For this we ſay unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them which are aſleep.

16 For the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt:

17 Then we, which are alive, and remain, ſhall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and ſo ſhall we ever be with the Lord.

18 Wherefore, comfort one another with theſe words.

In this chapter the Apoſtle begins to ſtir them up to progreſs in holineſs; wherein are ſeveral exhortations.

I. To holineſs and ſanctification in general; ver. 1—3. And,

II. To ſome particular branches of ſanctification; as

(1) Abſtinence from fornication; ver.—3.

(2) Exerciſe of chaſtity; ver. 4. explained by ſhewing the extent of the negative part of the duty; that it reaches to the inward luſt, and diſſuaded, becauſe it is heatheniſh; ver. 5.

(3) Abſtinence from all ſorts of oppreſſion and fraud, diſſuaded by the diſmal effects thereof; ver. 6. By reaſon of God's end in calling of them; ver. 7. by a conſideration of the heinouſneſs of the ſin, and of the means afforded by God to prevent it; ver. 8.

(4) Brotherly love; wherein the comparative needleſsneſs of his preſſing this duty; the reaſon of this needleſsneſs; becauſe they were taught of God; ver. 9. a proof of their teaching by their practice, and an expreſs exhortation to abound therein; ver. 10.

(5) Quietneſs and induſtry in our callings; inforced from his apoſtolick authority; ver. 11. the credit of religion in the eyes of Heathens; the fruit of diligence; competent proviſion; ver. 12.

(6) Moderation of ſorrow for the dead in Chriſt; upon which occaſion he falls into a diſcourſe concerning the ſtate of believers after death, and concerning Chriſt's ſecond coming; ver. 13—17. and ſo concludes with an application thereof to their comfort; wherein we read of a duty enjoined, viz. to comfort one another; and the means; with theſe words; ver. 18.

Ver. 2.—By the Lord Jeſus.] i. e. Which are commiſſioned by the Lord Jeſus to preach and teach all nations.

Ver. 3.—Fornication.] The Apoſtle in the verſes next following, explains what he means here by fornication.

Ver. 8.—Deſpiſeth.] Or, rejecteth our doctrine, rejecteth not man or human advice, but God, who has revealed his will to man.

Ver. 12.—Towards them that are without.] The pail of the Church, Jews and Gentiles unconverted to the faith of Chriſt.

— That ye may have lack of nothing.] Or that ye may ſtand in need of no man's goods or labour for your ſupport.

Ver. 13.—Which are aſleep.] i. e. Dead, who have laid down their lives for the cauſe of our holy faith; that ye do not ſorrow for them, as the Heathens mourn for their dead, becauſe they have not that aſſurance of a joyful eternity, as ye Chriſtians have, after this life, if ye believe and do as God commands.

Ver. 14.—Which ſleep in Jeſus.] i. e. Who die for, or in the true faith and practice of Chriſt's doctrine.

Ver. 16.—The dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt.] Before thoſe, who are to expect the ſentence of condemnation for their evil works; ſo that when the righteous are placed on the right hand of the throne of grace, they who have not believed, or die in their ſins, ſhall be ſummoned to eternal judgment.

Ver. 17.—Then we which are alive and remain.] Or, if any of us ſhould live upon earth to ſee that day.

CHAP. V.

1 He proceedeth in the former deſcription of Chriſt's coming to judgment, 16 and giveth divers precepts, 23 and ſo concludeth the Epiſtle.

BUT of the times and the ſeaſons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you.

2 For your ſelves know perfectly that the day of the Lord ſo cometh as a thief in the night.

3 For when they ſhall ſay, Peace and ſafety; then ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they ſhall not eſcape.

4 But ye, brethren, are not in darkneſs, that that day ſhould overtake you as a thief.

5 Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkneſs.

6 Therefore let us not ſleep as do others; but let us watch and be ſober.

7 For they that ſleep, ſleep in the night; and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night.

8 But let us who are of the day, be ſober, putting on the breaſt-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet, the hope of ſalvation.

9 For God hath not appointed us to wrath; but to obtain ſalvation by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt,

10 Who died for us, that whether we wake or ſleep, we ſhould live together with him.

11 Wherefore comfort your ſelves together, and edify one another, even as alſo ye do.

12 And we beſeech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admoniſh you;

13 And to eſteem them very highly in love for their works ſake. And be at peace among your ſelves.

14 Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, ſupport the weak, be patient toward all men.

15 See that none render evil for evil unto any man: but ever follow that which is good, both among your ſelves, and to all men.

16 Rejoyce evermore.

17 Pray without ceaſing.

18 In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Chriſt Jeſus concerning you.

19 Quench not the ſpirit.

20 Deſpiſe not propheſyings.

21 Prove all things: hold faſt that which is good.

22 Abſtain from all appearance of evil.

23 And the very God of peace ſanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole ſpirit and ſoul and body be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

24 Faithful is he that calleth you, who alſo will do it.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

26 Greet all the brethren with an holy kiſs.

27 I charge you by the Lord, that this epiſtle be read unto all the holy brethren.

28 The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

¶ The firſt epiſtle unto the Theſſalonians, was written from Athens.

The Apoſtle having treated in the latter part of the preceding chapter concerning the laſt reſurrection, and ſtate of the dead at Chriſt's coming, now in this chapter,

I. Purſues the ſame argument, ſhewing,

(1.) The uſefulneſs of an enquiry into the particular time of his coming, ver. 1.

(2.) Proves the impoſſibility of knowing it; from their own knowledge of the ſuddenneſs and unexpectedneſs of it, illuſtrated by a compariſon of a thief coming to ſpoil, ver. 2.

(3.) Proves the ſuddenneſs thereof, by its terrible effects on ſecure ſinners, viz. ſudden and unavoidable deſtruction, illuſtrated alſo by a ſimilitude, ver. 3.

(4.) Comforts the godly againſt the terrors of that day, by conſideration of their eſtate, which now is not darkneſs; and of their privilege in reſpect of that ſtate, not overtaken, ver. 4. And finally of their poſitive ſtate, ver. 5.

II. Exhorts to ſome other branches to ſanctification, (by way of inference from the conſideration both of their ſtate and privileges) viz.

(1.) Watchfulneſs; expreſſed both negatively and poſitively.

(2.) Sobriety, ver. 6. inforced by theſe reaſons; becauſe ſleep and drunkenneſs are the works of darkneſs and ignorance, ver. 7. and becauſe they are in a contrary ſtate which requires ſobriety, ver. 8.—

(3.) The exerciſe of faith, love and hope; ver.—8. inforced from the certainty of ſalvation, both in reſpect of God's decree; ver. 9. and the Mediator's purchaſe. Where he declares the means whereby Chriſt purchaſed ſalvation, viz. by dying, and the end propoſed by him in his death, that we ſhould live together with him; ver. 10.

(4.) Mutual edification (by way of inference from what went before) amplified by a commendation of them on account of their preſent diligence therein, ver. 11.

(5.) The duties of people to their miniſters; where he begins with a deſcription of their miniſters, whom he deſcribes by their work, i. e. labour; by their dignity or office; in theſe words, are over you: And by a particular branch of their office, to admoniſh. Then he ſets forth the people's duty towards them, who ſhould own and acknowledge them as ſuch, ver. 12. ſhould entertain an high eſteem of them, and love them, for their work ſake, ver. 13.—

(6.) Mutual peaceableneſs, ver.—13.

(7.) Several duties joined together, ver. 14.

(8.) Forbearing revenge and exerciſe of kindneſs, ver. 15.

(9.) A cheerful frame of ſpirit under all diſpenſations, ver. 16.

(10.) Perſeverance in prayer, ver. 17.

(11.) Thankfulneſs in all eſtates; with the reaſon, ver. 18.

(12.) Not to quench, but to cheriſh the gifts and motions of God's Spirit, ver. 19.

(13) Not to deſpiſe, but highly eſteem the publick preaching of the Word, ver. 20.

(14.) To try what doctrine they hear, and after trial to embrace what is ſound, ver. 21.

(15.) To abſtain from whatſoever has any national appearance of evil, ver. 22.

III. Concludes the Epiſtle by a prayer for their ſanctification and preſervation, ver. 23. and with a promiſe, aſſuring them that God would anſwer his prayer, and do it, aſſigning the reaſon, ver. 24. to which he ſubjoins a requeſt for their prayers, ver. 25. and ſo concludes the whole with a ſalutation, ver. 26.

Ver. 1. But of the times paſt and the ſeaſons, &c.] See Matt. xxiv. 36, 43, 44. Luke xvii. 27, 28. and xxi. 34, 35.

Ver. 4. — In darkneſs.] Such as the Heathens were in, who did not enjoy the benefit of a Divine Revelation; ſee Luke i. 79. and the notes on Luke ii. 32.

Ver. 5. — The children of light.] Which ſhines unto the world through the Revelation of God by Jeſus Chriſt; ſee Luke ii. 32.

Ver. 6. — Let us not ſleep.] i. e. Let us not be neglectful of our ſalvation, as they are, who as it were ſleep in their ſins.

Ver. 9. — To wrath.] Which all men incur originally from the juſtice of God, for the crime of our firſt parents.

Ver. 10. — Whether we wake or ſleep.] This is to be underſtood literally, that if we ſerve God and keep his commands, we are ſure that he will be always our defence from the danger of the enemy.

Ver. 14. — Unruly.] Or, diſorderly in their moral behaviour.

Ver. 16. Rejoyce evermore.] See Philip. iv. 4.

Ver. 17. Pray without ceaſing.] Grotius, Vorſtius and Cornelius a Lapide, are of opinion, that theſe words ought to be connected with thoſe in the following verſe, in every thing give thanks; for this is the will of God in Chriſt Jeſus concerning you; and if ſo they manifeſtly contain this propoſition, that we Chriſtians are obliged, by the tenure of our profeſſion, and, as we are ſuch, to great meaſures of our devotion. That we are bound to have a conſtant, and aſſiduous commerce with our good God, in prayer, and thankſgiving; who hath vouchſafed to us, in the Goſpel of his Son, a more expreſs Revelation of his nature and his will; of his love and kindneſs to us, in ſending his Son to redeem us, and his Holy Spirit to inſtruct, reform, and ſanctify us; and of our duty conſequent thereupon, to walk worthy of God, 1 Theſſ. ii. 10. i. e. To act, and live in ſome proportion to that honour God hath herein done us; who is now in Chriſt Jeſus, after a more peculiar manner, our Lord, our Maſter, our Friend, and Benefactor, our Father, and our God. That ſince God is come down to us, (the Word was made fleſh, and dwelt, or had his tabernacle, among us; appeared glorioully in our nature) our ſouls muſt now be always mounting up to him, on the wings of prayer, and in the daily ſacrifice of praiſe, and incenſe of thankſgiving. And that we Chriſtians muſt habituate, and accuſtom our ſouls to dwell above; and to converſe with the original of our being, the God of all our mercies, and all our hopes; ſince it is the great buſineſs of our religion to diſpoſe, and qualify us in this life, for the enjoyment of God in the next; and by raiſing our minds from groſs, and ſenſible objects, to a reliſh, and taſte of things ſpiritual and inviſible, to naturalize us to Heaven.

And, ſince theſe general precepts, pray without ceaſing; in every thing give thanks; do unqueſtionably import both frequency, and perſeverance in the whole extent and latitude of devotion; both as to its ſeveral parts, as alſo, as to its circumſtances of time and place, including all kinds, and all manners of addreſs to God, whether ſettled, and regular; or accidental and occaſional, in point of time; publick in Churches, or private in our cloſets and retirements; or with our families, in point of place: It muſt be confeſſed, that we are chiefly, and more eſpecially obliged to that kind, or manner of addreſs, which moſt fully anſwers the principal ends, and fundamental reaſons of prayer in general.

Now, the great end and deſign of praying to God, being to do honour to him, in the acknowledgment we make, that as we derive from him, ſo we wholly depend upon him, for all that we are, or have, or hope for; and, to procure from God a ſupply to all our own, and others wants, both in our private and publick capacities; it evidently follows, that the commands here given, To pray without ceaſing; and, to give thanks in every thing; or upon all occaſions, and opportunities, which do preſent themſelves, muſt be underſtood, and that principally, to lay an obligation upon us to make conſcience of frequenting the daily publick worſhip of God, where we have an opportunity of ſo doing. Since this manner of application to God, doth apparently, above any other, advance the glory of God, and promote all the valuable intereſts both of ourſelves, and others; whether conſidered perſonally, nally, or collectively, as we make a ſociety or body, either civil or religious, as hence it follows,

That we Chriſtians do ſtand obliged, both by virtue of theſe, and the like precepts, and by the reaſon of the thing itſelf, conſcientiouſly to frequent the daily publick prayers of the Church, where we have opportunity; and can find, or make leiſure ſo to do. For no man, or woman ought to think it altogether an indifferent thing, (generally ſpeaking, and the circumſtances of particular caſes being allowed for) whether they go to ſerve God with the congregation; or ſtay at home, and employ themſelves in ſome other thing, though lawful, yet at that time, not neceſſary; or not ſufficient to furniſh them with ſuch a reaſon as may ſerve to juſtify them to God, and their own conſcience, directed by the meaſures of Chriſtian prudence and piety; of love to God, and a due care of their immortal ſouls. Becauſe,

We Chriſtians are obliged to frequent the daily publick worſhip of God, out of regard to his authority, who hath enjoined us ſo to do, in this and the like places of Scripture; ſuch as are theſe following, Epheſ. vi. 18. Praying always ['Eν παντὶ καιρῷ, at every ſeaſon] with all prayer and ſupplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perſeverance, Luke xviii. 1. Where our Saviour, ſpeaks a parable, to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint, μὲ ἐκκακεῖν, not to be ſlothful, remiſs, and negligent in this great duty, 1 Tim. ii. 8. I will therefore that men pray every where. Which both Baſil, and Beza do expound of houſes, or Churches ſet apart for the publick worſhip of God; in which Paul would have Chriſtians to pray, and not only at the temple at Jeruſalem; ſee Dr. Patrick's Diſcourſe concerning Prayer. Now, although it muſt be granted, that none of theſe Scriptures do expreſly enjoin the daily uſe of publick prayers; yet ſince theſe do more compleatly anſwer all the ends of prayer, than any private devotion can do, they muſt of neceſſity be comprehended, and by parity of reaſon chiefly deſigned in thoſe general commands.

Beſides that, to pray without ceaſing, or continually, may be very properly expounded of our preſenting our ſelves before God, in his houſe, as often as we are either obliged thereto by publick authority, or invited by the laudable cuſtom, and example of pious, and well-diſpoſed perſons. For this, in a popular and legal ſenſe, is doing a thing indefinitely, or without ceaſing; (ſee Dr. Barrow) when we perform it ſo often as we are required by law, or cuſtom. Thus the prieſts are ſaid, Heb. ix. 6. to go always into the tabernacle, accompliſhing the ſervice of God. Always, i. e. at all thoſe ſolemn times which were appointed for ſuch ſervice, and the Apoſtles are ſaid, Luke xxiv. 53. after Chriſt's aſcenſion, and their return to Jeruſalem, to have been continually in the temple, bleſſing, and praiſing God, i. e. They went daily to the temple at the uſual times, or hours of prayer. Since then we are commanded, To pray without ceaſing; and to give thanks in every thing, or upon every occaſion; to pray always, to pray every where, —— in every ſeaſon, or upon every opportunity; except a man ſhall be ſo abſurd as to deny the ſolemn times ſet apart every day for publick devotion, to be ſeaſons, and opportunities of prayer; the material Church to be a place; and the hours of prayer to be any part of time; (and ſo to be neceſſarily included in the terms, always, without ceaſing, continually) he muſt confeſs, that all theſe precepts of our Saviour, and his Apoſtles, may, and ought, by the analogy of faith, and deduction of right reaſon, to be interpreted at leaſt, as well of the publick, as of our private addreſſes to God. And conſequently, that we ought for this great reaſon to be aſſiduous, and conſcientiouſly diligent in our daily publick approaches to God in his ſanctuary; becauſe this is a conſiderable part of our duty, as we are Chriſtians; or, this is the will of God in Chriſt Jeſus concerning us. And,

Theſe things conſidered, it will not certainly become any wiſe and good man, who loves his God, his religion, or his own ſoul, uſually, and cuſtomarily, or indeed at any time, to abſent himſelf from the daily publick worſhip of God, without a very juſt and warrantable reaſon. And he who allows himſelf in ſuch plain omiſſions of his duty, upon any unjuſtifiable account whatever, denies to yield obedience to this precept, Pray without ceaſing; ſince he ceaſes, nay he refuſes to pray, when the Providence of God, the direction and order of the Church, the cuſtom and example of devout perſons, do ſtrongly invite, and ſollicit him, by reſorting to God's Houſe, and hearing his part in the publick worſhip, to do open honour to God, and advantage both to himſelf, and the whole Church militant.

We are alſo obliged to frequent the publick prayers, becauſe we do thereby bring glory, and honour to God; and give credit and reputation to our religion; and that in much greater degrees than we can do by any private addreſſes to him, either in our cloſets, or with our families. For though it be true, that we may worſhip God acceptably at home; and it is both our duty and our advantage ſo to do; yet ſince honour, and glory, are properly outward ſignifications of the inward value and regard we have for perſons; we do not properly honour, and glorify God, in our private devotions; but do then more eſpecially give him the honour due unto his name, and make his name to be glorious, when we pray unto, and praiſe him, before much people. For, when we every day make our court to him, as to the Great King and Lord of all; and wait upon him, in his own houſe, we thereby give a publick teſtimony of the eſteem and reverence we have for him. We own our ſelves to be of his family and retinue; to depend upon him, and to hold all we have as from him, by the daily publick homage we thus pay unto him. Hereby we may alſo properly be ſaid to ſerve God, or to do our duty to him in promoting his intereſt, (if I may ſo ſpeak) by keeping up, and maintaining a lively ſenſe of his being in the hearts of men; and propagating and advancing conceptions of him, worthy of his greatneſs, and tranſcendant Majeſty; of his infinite Wiſdom, Power, and Goodneſs; when we thus avowedly celebrate him, as the univerſal Parent, Preſerver, and Governor of mankind; who alone underſtands, and alone is both able, and willing to ſupply the wants of all his creatures, who invoke, and depend upon him.

Hereby we likewiſe bring credit, and reputation to our religion; which can hardly be ſupported, without ſuch viſible profeſſion. We openly declare ourſelves its champions; and that we are not aſhamed of our Bleſſed Lord, nor of his words, or the laws of his Holy Inſtitution, in the midſt of a crooked, and perverſe, a ſcoffing and Atheiſtical generation. We let all profane miſcreants ſee, that they can no more baniſh the notion of God out of the world, than they can pluck the ſun out of the firmament; though they may poſſibly wink hard enough, neither to ſee the one, nor take due notice of the other: That notwithſtanding their affected blindneſs, and wilful ignorance, God hath ſtill a very conſiderable party in the world; numbers of men, who think it their greateſt honour to be, and to be accounted his ſervants, and every day publickly own that name, and title; and ſuch as pay their daily attendance on their dear Lord and Maſter in his own Houſe.

3. Another motive, or reaſon obliging us to frequent the daily prayers of the Church, is the conſideration of the advantages we our ſelves ſhall reap from our ſo doing. For,

The time we ſpend in the publick ſervice of God is the beſt ſecured, and the beſt beſtowed of any other. This is certainly the beſt, becauſe the moſt Heavenly employment; it being the continual buſineſs of the Angels, and the Archangels, and all the hoſt of Heaven, with joint praiſes to laud, and celebrate the Divine Majeſty. So that by thus doing, we begin Heaven here; we do already enter upon the life, and ſtate, and employment of Angels; being united to that bleſſed choir, and doing as they do. And he that ſhall duly acquit himſelf herein, will have this great ſatisfaction, that he hath ſpent at leaſt one hour every day to the beſt advantage, as an anticipation, and fore-taſte of that life, which we hope to lead in the preſence of God for ever.

Again, our ſo doing lays a ſtrong, and daily obligation upon us to live a more ſtrict, and holy, a more Divine and Heavenly life, than others do; to be unblameable, unreproveable in all our converſation. And he who doth not charge himſelf with the daily practice and exerciſe of all thoſe graces, for which he prays to God, hath reaſon to ſuſpect himſelf of hypocriſy, and formality in theſe his open prayers. Thoſe then who make conſcience of approaching God as oft as opportunity ſerves in his publick ordinances, muſt alſo for this very reaſon, beſides all others, make more conſcience of preſenting him, as with a pure heart, ſo with a circumſpect, innocent, unſpotted life. And certainly if ſuch men are not much better than others, who pretend leſs, they are much worſe; ſince they do hereby, openly profeſs more zeal for God's glory, more love to him, and more care to pleaſe him; and a greater ſenſe both of his goodneſs to them, and their duty to him, ſo that if they diſparage ſuch their profeſſion, by unſuitable practice; they give juſt reaſon to believe, they have ſome other end to ſerve than that of religion. And ſo

We ſhall grow in grace; and particularly in the love of God, and of our neighbour; thoſe two eminent and comprehenſive graces, on which hang all the law, and the Prophets. For the firſt of theſe, the love of God; 'tis certain, that the more often we converſe with him, the more intimately we are acquainted with him (who being the ſupreme good needs only to be known, that ſo he may be loved by us) the more ſtrongly will our ſouls cleave unto him: So that if to our private meditation, and prayers, we add ſuch daily ſolemn converſe with him in the publick prayers and thankſgivings, and hearing of his word, our love to him muſt needs grow and increaſe thereby. And as to the love of our neighbour; ſince every ſiding, and taking part, though but in ſome inconſiderable opinion, intereſt, or cuſtom, education, or courſe of life, is a peculiar endearment, and ground of affection towards thoſe of the ſame opinion, intereſt, or way; how much more prone will they be to bear an hearty good will and kindneſs toward each other, who are daily engaged in the ſame common intereſt; and that of the higheſt importance, viz. a joint endeavour to bring publick honour to their common Lord; and to forward their own ſalvation; who twiſt and combine their prayers, and praiſes; and converſe here with one another, as they hope to do hereafter in Heaven. Not to mention now the ſolemn interceſſion made twice a-day for the whole Catholick Church, and the open declaration of our ſo forgiving all men, who offend, or injure us, as we deſire and hope for mercy, and forgiveneſs at the hands of God. Now, beſides the efficacy of the united prayers of a Chriſtian congregation, put up for themſelves and for each other (at which Chriſt hath promiſed to be preſent in a ſpecial manner, Matt. xviii. 20.) It is, I think, an undeniable certainty, That he who ſhall both in private, and alſo in publick, thus daily importune the throne of grace, ſhall obtain a greater meaſure of theſe, and all other graces, than he who contents himſelf with his private, ſolitary prayers only.

Another conſideration enforcing this duty of our waiting upon God in his ſanctuary, is the great benefit and good which others may receive from our ſo doing; and that, not only as particular perſons taking notice of our regular, ſteady, exemplary piety, joined with an unblemiſhed life; and a truly Chriſtian converſation may be won by our good example to the ſame practice; and by the ſhine of our light, by ſeeing our good works, may alſo themſelves come in like manner to glorify our Father which is in Heaven But alſo, becauſe publick prayers, both as they tend to the bettering all thoſe who do conſcientiouſly frequent them, and ſo to the augmenting the number, and improving the graces of righteous perſons, for whoſe ſake God often ſpares a wicked place or people; and alſo, in their nature, deſign, and end, are the proper inſtrument for the obtaining and continuing publick peace and tranquility; or the eſtabliſhment and proſperity of a Church and ſtate. Whence R. Maimonides well obſerves, that he who dwells in a city in which there is a ſynagogue or houſe of prayer, and doth not therein pray with the aſſembly, he is to be cenſured as an ill neighbour; as one that is wanting in his duty to promote, by his prayers, the good of that community, of which he is therefore an unworthy member. This is the doctrine of a Jewiſh Rabbi, and, no doubt, but the received practice of the ancient Jewiſh Church, of which Paul had been a zealous member: and therefore commends it in thoſe words, pray without ceaſing. And this will appear plainer from

This conſideration, that publick prayers has been by general conſent, and univerſal practice of the Church of Chriſt, eſtabliſhed in all ages and places almoſt in the world, as a neceſſary part of our holy religion. The Apoſtles, as we read, Luke xxiv. 53. after Chriſt's aſcenſion, were continually in the temple, i. e. every morning and evening (in which ſenſe the morning and evening ſacrifice was called the continual burnt offering) at the time of publick prayer, praiſing and bleſſing God. And the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions (which are by all allowed to be very ancient) do enjoin the Biſhop to admoniſh and command the people to come every day, both morning and evening, to the publick prayers; and that none by abſenting himſelf, ſhould maim the Church, and take away one member from the body of Chriſt. 2. Conſtit. ch. 59.

And as in all ages, ſo in all places, the Churches both of the eaſtern and weſtern communion, Greek, Armenian, Roman, Lutheran and Calviniſt; all Chriſtian Churches almoſt do ſo univerſally underſtand and agree, that the daily publick worſhip of God is enjoined both by the Scriptures, and the very nature of a Chriſtian Church, that there is ſcarce any place in which it is not conſtantly and religiouſly obſerved and uſed. For, a Chriſtian Church is, in its proper notion, An aſſembly of men and women met together to worſhip God by Chriſt; or, A company joined together to have fellowſhip with God, and one with another in all holy duties; of which prayer, thankſgiving and praiſes are the chief. As thoſe who need, or deſire farther information, or ſatisfaction in this argument, may find largely, and convincingly handled, in a diſcourſe concerng prayer, publiſhed by a pious and learned divine of our Church, Dr. Patrick.

Ver. 19. Quench not the ſpirit.] i. e. Now, that the ſpirit of God which is the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter inſpires you with ſuch holy purpoſes and reſolutions, let not any thing in this world hinder your proficiency in the faith and love of God, to which you are called; ſee Eph. iv. 30. 2 Tim. i. 6. 1 Cor. xiv. 30.

Ver. 20. Deſpiſe not propheſyings.] Or, turn not your back on the preacher of God's word, becauſe it is his duty to warn every man, and to teach every man in all wiſdom, that he may preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus; ſee Coloſſ. i. 28.

Ver. 21. Prove all things: hold faſt that which is good.] Here let us obſerve, that nothing concerns us ſo much as the ſalvation of our ſouls, and in order to that the choice of our religion, as theſe words and the context give us to underſtand. Therefore it well becomes us to uſe great care, and ſtrictly to examine things. This we do in matters of leſs moment; when we purchaſe, and when we trade; when we are concerned for our health, our eſtates, and properties. The Holy Scriptures frequently put us upon this care; and the man who is diligent herein will be able to give the beſt account of himſelf hereafter, as well as find the greateſt ſatisfaction here. Such a man will have ſteady principles, and have this comfort, that it is not by mere chance, but choice, that he is what he is. This is the way to be certain that we are in the right, which no man can be without underſtanding. We may be confident, indeed, but can't never be certain without knowledge and a due examination of things. This is the purport of theſe words in the text. But as they have been often diſputed and wreſted to the ſubverting of many babes in Chriſt, I ſhall conſider them more largely, and ſhew,

I. Who thoſe perſons were to whom the Apoſtle gives this advice, to prove all things, and hold faſt that which is good. And I ſay, The perſons to whom this advice is given, was the whole Church of the Theſſalonians, ch. i. 1. Not to the biſhops and governors of the Church only, but to the people alſo. This appears from the words, ver. 12. We beſeech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord and admoniſh you.

It cannot be ſuppoſed that Paul does here direct himſelf to the head and not unto the members. He does generally addreſs himſelf to the Church in the moſt diffuſive ſenſe of that word, as, Rom. i. 7. To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be ſaints. And 1 Cor. i. 2. Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus called to be ſaints with all that in every place call upon the name of Jeſus Chriſt the Lord. Again, 2 Cor. i. 1. Unto the Church of God which is in Corinth, with all the ſaints which are in all Achaia. Again, Gal. i. 2. Unto the Church of Galatia: And, Eph. i. 1. To the ſaints which are at Epheſus, and to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus. And where the biſhops and other miniſters of the Church are named the body of the faithful are not forgotten. Thus, Phil. i. 1. To all the ſaints in Chriſt Jeſus which are at Philippi with the biſhops and deacons. Again, Coloſſ. i. 2. To the ſaints and faithful brethren in Chriſt which are at Coloſſe. And, chap. i. 1. 2 Theſ. i. 1. To the Church of the Theſſalonians. And thus alſo James, i. 1. To the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad. Thus Peter, 1 Pet. i. 1. To the ſtrangers ſcattered, &c. And, 2 Pet. i. 1. To them that have obtained like precious faith with us.

And John (as a learned man hath obſerved) may well be ſuppoſed to direct that Epiſtle to the Church, or whole body of Chriſtians, which according to our verſion is ſaid to be directed to the elect lady. Jude directs his to them that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt and called; Jude v. 1. Paul where he gives laws about the officers and government of the Church directs his Epiſtles to the governors only, as in his Epiſtles to Timothy and Titus; otherwiſe he directs, as here, to the whole body of Chriſtians.

II. Of what importance it was to adviſe them to prove all things. The Greek word, which we render prove, ſignifies to examine the truth or goodneſs of a thing; and to diſcern the difference between one thing and another. It ſignifies to try and examine, and ſometime (as the reſult of ſuch tryal) to approve; ſee Luke xii. 56. xiv. 19. Rom. ii. 18. 1 Cor. iii. 13. xi. 27. xvi. 3.

It hath in the New Teſtament a particular reference to matters of religion: Theſe things deſerve examining, and there are about religion many dangerous errors which want not the vogue and colour of truth. We are required to try the ſpirits, and warned not to believe every ſpirit; ſee Rom. ii. 18. xii. 2. Eph. v. 10. Phil. i. 10. 1 John iv. 1.

We are required to examine and try the truth and goodneſs of things, yea of all things, and not to take them upon truſt: And this precept is ſubjoined to that, Deſpiſe not propheſyings; i. e. the preaching of the Word, as may be collected from the Apoſtle's words elſewhere, 1 Cor. xiv. 3, 4, 5.

Paul doth frequently put us in mind to reverence the miniſters of religion, and tells us, how they are to be eſteemed, Heb. xiii. 17. 1 Cor. iv. 1. 2 Cor. v. 20. He requires us in this chapter, to eſteem them very highly in love for their works ſake, ver. 13. and bids us not deſpiſe propheſyings, and yet even to this he adds prove all things, &c. Whence,

Collect that it is the duty of Chriſtian people to examine the grounds of their religion and faith, and not to take them upon truſt. Where note,

What I plead for, is a judgment of diſcretion and not of juriſdiction and direction, which belongs to our ſuperiors. It is here as in the laws of a kingdom. The people are obliged to know and keep them. It is the duty and the intereſt of every man to know ſo much of them as concerns his life and property, and the diſcharging his duty to his prince and country. But then the power of making theſe laws lies in his prince or governors; and the learned in the law are only fit to direct and guide men in the matters of doubt and queſtion. And ſo it is in religion. It does not belong to every private man to be a preacher and interpreter of Holy Writ, much leſs hath he any thing to do to make laws for other men. But the private man hath a ſoul to ſave, and in order thereunto is bound to inform himſelf in matters of faith, and thoſe things which tend to the regulating his life and converſation, Rom. xiv. 1. We do not receive the people as judges of controverſies, and doubtful diſputations; yet think them concerned in religion in the mean time. For matters of diſpute and queſtion the prieſts lips are to preſerve knowledge. Here it becomes private men to be modeſt, and to preſerve a great reverence for their ſpiritual guides. But there is a great deal of difference between asking the way, when we are at a ſtand, and pulling out our eyes and leaving ourſelves wholly to be led by another. We may uſe our own eyes and our guides too.

It is likewiſe a judgment of private diſcretion which I plead for. It is not fit that a private man ſhould judge for himſelf and his brother too. His conſcience is not to be the common ſtandard and meaſure of other mens. Let every man be fully perſwaded in his own mind, Rom. xiv. 5. Every man ought to have this liberty to himſelf and to be content therewith, and not to cenſure his brother.

The practice of private men muſt alſo (notwithſtanding this liberty) be governed by the laws of their juſt ſuperiors. And nothing can excuſe them from an active obedience, but where their governors command what God hath forbid, or forbid what he hath commanded.

And this determination of our practice (eſpecially in matters of order and diſcipline, of which I would be chiefly underſtood) is very conſiſtent with that judgment of diſcretion which I am now pleading for. Indeed if the thing commanded be evil I muſt obey God rather than man; but if it be not, I ſin againſt God when I diſobey my ſuperiors. A private man is not judge of what is convenient, moſt decent and orderly, but ought to judge between good and evil, lawful and unlawful, true and falſe.

In a word, men are not to take their religion upon truſt; they ought to examine their religion; to try the doctrines which they are taught whether true or falſe, revealed by God or not: And alſo to conſider whether what is enjoined them be lawful or not. And

This is the doctrine which the Scripture teacheth us. We are here commanded to prove all things; and our Saviour bids his followers, Matt. xxiv. 4. xxiii. 10. Take heed that no man deceive them. Chriſt allows no man a tyranny over the conſciences of men, 1 Pet. v. nor would Peter have it uſurped, nor did the Apoſtles themſelves practice it. Paul declares himſelf not to be a Lord over their faith but an helper of their joy, 2 Cor. i. 24. Heb. xiii. 20. Chriſt is our Maſter and great Shepherd. His miniſters are but ſtewards and embaſſadors, and are no farther imitable than they follow Chriſt, 1 Cor. xi. 1.

Our Saviour calls upon his followers to beware of the doctrine of the Phariſees and Sadducees, and to ſearch the Scriptures, Matt. xvi. John v. 39. 1 John iv. 1. And we are required to try the ſpirits, and not to believe an Apoſtle or an Angel that ſhould preach any other Goſpel, Gal. i.

God gave his law for our direction: And we are aſſured that the Scripture is ſufficient to render the man of God wiſe unto ſalvation through faith in Chriſt. And thoſe men are commended who ſearched the Scriptures and examined the doctrine of the primitive preachers by them; ſee Deut. iv. Pſal. i. 2 Tim. iii. Luke xvi. Acts xvii. 11.

If the blind lead the blind (ſays Chriſt, Matt. xv. 14.) both ſhall fall into the ditch. Men will not be excuſed becauſe they have been miſled by their guides, and believed as their Church believed. Ezekiel tells us that where the people are not warned they ſhall die in their iniquity; Ezek. iii. 17, 18. Religion is every man's concernment, and every man is obliged to take care of his ſoul, and not blindly to give himſelf up to him that pretends to be an infallible guide.

Be ready always, ſays Peter, to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, 1 Pet. iii. 15. We muſt then judge of the grounds of our faith and not to take it upon truſt. And therefore,

If the people were bound to lay aſide their own diſcretion and entirely to give themſelves up (without examining) to be led as their guides pleaſe.

It would juſtify the idolatry of the Iſraelites which was at any time introduced upon them by their high-prieſts, or falſe prophets, or evil kings. We read of their ſacrificing in high places, their worſhip of the golden calf, and the calves of Dan and Beth-el, of their brazen ſerpent and their falſe gods. It was not a juſt excuſe for them that the golden calf was made by Aaron: They were not without blame for offering upon that altar, which reſembled that which was at Damaſcus, becauſe Uriah their high-prieſt ſet it up, and Ahaz their king commanded the uſe of it, 2 Kings x. But we know that God was angry with them when they followed their blind guides, which he would not have been, had they done well in it.

This principle would have juſtified the Jews in rejecting our Saviour. For who could blame them for doing that which their high-prieſt and Sanhedrim, their prieſts and elders had done before? It is true he wrought many miracles: But to this they might reply, that their Church did not believe them effected by the power of God. Indeed Jeſus appeals often to the Scripture; but, according to this principle, to this they might have pleaded that it was not for private men to underſtand Scripture, and that their Church did underſtand it otherwiſe. They might have pleaded moreover that the interpreting of Scripture did not belong to private men as they were, and that they were to be governed by tradition or the oral law, and not by the written one only; that they had among them an high-prieſt and Sanhedrim, ſcribes or men learned in the law and traditions, which latter they received with equal reverence with the written word. Have any of the rulers and the Phariſees believed on him? ſay they, John vii. 48. They were ſo far from it that they agreed that he who confeſſed him to be the Chriſt ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue, John ix. Would ſuch pretences, think ye, have ſerved the turn of the Jews? By no means. They ought to have read the Scriptures, to which Jeſus appealed, and to have compared events with prophecies. This our Lord puts them upon, John v. 39. 45, 46, 47. and it was at once their duty and intereſt to have done it; and they are commended who took this courſe; ſee Acts xvii. 11.

This principle might afterwards have juſtified the Jews in their rejecting the Chriſtian doctrine and the Apoſtles and firſt preachers thereof. The Jews might have pleaded againſt the Apoſtles many things, as, the undoubted antiquity of the Jewiſh Church, and novelty of the Chriſtian doctrine: The neceſſity of giving themſelves up to the conduct of their prieſts, whoſe lips were to preſerve knowledge, and they were to ſeek the law at their mouth: They might have pleaded that they were in the ſafeſt way to ſalvation; for, though they denied the poſſibility of it to the Chriſtians, yet, Jeſus himſelf owned that ſalvation was of the Jews. They might have urged the 17th of Deuteronomy to prove the infallibility of their Church with a far greater ſhew than ever Thou art Peter, &c. was produced to prove that of the biſhop of Rome. It being expreſly required, Deut. xvii. 8—10. That in matters of controverſy men ſhould abide by the ſentence of the law pronounced by the prieſt, or judge of that time; whereas no ſuch thing is ſaid of the biſhop of Rome in the New Teſtament.

This principle would effectually have hindred the propagation of the Chriſtian Religion among the Gentile or Pagan part of the world. They had their prieſts and high-prieſts too as well as the Jews, they had antiquity to plead, and great ſucceſs and proſperity under their way of worſhip. Sequendi ſunt nobis parentes qui feliciter ſequuti ſunt ſuos, ſaith Symmachus. If this principle might be allowed there could be no way left to ſpread the faith among them.

This one principle where ever admitted would have put a perpetual bar to the converſion of Jews and Infidels to the Chriſtian Faith. For what method can we take to bring them over if we cannot convince them that we are in the right and they in the wrong? And how can they be made ſenſible of this, if we allow them not the liberty of judging? And ſure if they be fit to judge of the whole matter they are not unfit to judge of the ſeverals. If we allow them the liberty to judge of Chriſtianity before they embrace it, it is not reaſonable to deny them a judgment of diſcretion when they are received into the Chriſtian Faith.

This principle admitted would have excuſed the people that ſhould have continued in Arianiſm, when the biſhops and prieſts and generally the whole Church was infected with it. The Arians once filled the Church, called themſelves orthodox and catholicks and others hereticks. According to this principle the people ought to have continued thus always; for they were to be governed by their biſhops and prieſts; and why ſhould they think themſelves obliged to hearken to what you had to offer from Scripture, or reaſon, or the council of Nice, when it was againſt the ſenſe of the preſent Church? Again,

This principle, not being ſelf-evident, is inconſiſtent, and manifeſtly deſtroys it ſelf. For it is liable to be examined, and ought to be ſtrictly examined becauſe very much depends upon it. If it may be examined by the people they who maintain it have loſt their queſtion. For then the people are not obliged to deſpoil themſelves of their faculties and wiſer powers but may judge in matters of religion, this being of the moſt principal concernment of all. This ought not to be taken upon truſt becauſe their ſalvation depends upon it. If this chance to be falſe they may blindly give themſelves up to a guide who may lead them to the regions of darkneſs. But,

Suppoſing there were any truth in this principle, yet it would be of no uſe to us unleſs we were alſo directed to the Church and guides to whom we are to ſurrender our ſelves. Suppoſing we were bound to believe as the Church believes and blindly to follow the prieſts, yet if we do not know what Church is to be thus truſted, and what prieſts thus to be confided in, and under what profeſſion we are to do it we ſhall be at as great a loſs as ever. For it cannot be ſuppoſed that it is the duty of all people, in every country and under every profeſſion to do this. For Jews, Chriſtians and Infidels cannot be all under an equal obligation. It is then to be conſidered to what Church this belongs. Beſides,

This principle invades the prerogative of God, and uſurps upon his peculiar. He only hath a direct dominion over the conſciences of men. He is the one lawgiver who is able to ſave and to deſtroy, Jam. iv. 12. We are obliged to believe a verity becauſe he ſaith it. There muſt be a revelation before a Divine Faith. Men have not power to make articles of faith, or to require our aſſent upon preſumption of ſuch power. And,

Many things in religion are ſo plain that a man of ordinary capacity and competently inſtructed in the principles of religion is able to judge of them: But this principle deſtroys that power, and ſuppoſeth men unable to judge in the plaineſt caſes whatſoever.

I grant that there are ſome things in them hard to be underſtood, and every man therefore is not fit to interpret them. God hath appointed an order of men to do this. He hath given ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, Evangeliſts, Paſtors and Teachers, Eph. iv. 11. not to hoodwink the people and lead them out of the way, but for the perfecting of the ſaints, and for the edifying of the body of Chriſt, and preſerving the people from the ſlight of men and cunning craftineſs whereby they lie in wait to deceive. This is the great purpoſe of the inſtitution. It is for the inſtruction and building up of the faithful. For,

Our way is generally plain, and there we need no guide if we uſe our eyes, and mind our rule. Matters of faith, as well as manners, are plainly revealed.

Such are all the articles of our moſt ancient Creed: They are ſo plainly taught in the Holy Scriptures, that he who runs may read them there.

That we love God and our neighbour are the weightier things of religion, and eaſy to be underſtood: Juſtice and mercy and peaceableneſs are plain. That we obey the king, be charitable to the poor, juſt to all men, and do as we would be done by: That we uſe no craft or equivocations, but be ſincere in all our actions and profeſſions, are things not hard to be underſtood.

But if men ſhould undertake to be guides to the people, and teach them rebellion, injuſtice, cruelty, diſſembling and equivocation; to kill their king and deſtroy their enemies; a man of mean underſtanding may diſcern that theſe are not the gifts which Chriſt gave unto men, but that they are a company of falſe people, or rather ravenous wolves; by whom it is pretended that this doctrine will introduce hereſies and ſchiſms into the Church. And on the other hand that the people, who confide in their paſtors, and believe as the Church believes, are kept in unity and at peace. To this I anſwer,

1. It is a fooliſh thing to imagine that there ſhall be no hereſies or ſchiſms, and that we have found a way to prevent them. This is like the boaſt of a mountebank who pretends to a panacea or univerſal remedy for all diſeaſes, who gains ſmall credit with wiſe men. I grant that hereſies and ſchiſms are great evils, and that we ought to prevent them what we can. And much might be done towards it if the miniſters of religion could as eaſily ſecure the practice as inform the minds of men. But ſcandals or offences are great evils as well as hereſies: And yet Chriſt tells us, that it muſt needs be that offences come, Matt. xviii. 7. And Paul tells us as plainly, There muſt be alſo hereſies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifeſt among you, 1 Cor. xi. 19. God hath foretold that there ſhould come a falling away, and that ſome ſhould be under ſtrong deluſions and believe a lye, 2 Theſſ. ii. It is a vain thing to pretend a remedy againſt that evil againſt which God himſelf hath provided none.

2. To believe without examining, is ſo far from preventing hereſies that it ſecures men under them without any hope of emerging. A blind obedience may as well detain men in hereſy as keep them in the faith. This principle ſhuts men up, and is ſo far from preventing the diſeaſe, that whenever men are overtaken with it all that it does is, that it hinders all remedy.

3. That the principle which I have expoſed, being not ſelf-evident but conteſtable, may well be ſuppoſed to divide men about the main queſtion. It ought to be examined becauſe it does not carry its evidence along with it. And then who can tell but that the principle, which is deviſed to unite, may chance to divide men when they go about to examine it?

4. We will ſuppoſe this principle ſelf-evident, and that it hath been anciently and univerſally received (which is by no means to be granted) yet we know that it was not effectual. The Gnoſticks, Arians and other hereticks did infeſt the primitive Church. This principle then was received in the Church from the beginning or it was not: If it were not, it is then a new doctrine, and we are not obliged to receive it now. If it were received in the ancient Church, I would then know how hereſies and ſchiſms got into the Church? Was this principle then ineffectual, and ſhall it not now fail to be effectual?

II. It may be objected again, that a liberty of judgment in matters of religion granted to every private perſon will deſtroy that reverence which is due from the people to their paſtors, and make them their judges.

1. I anſwer, There is a great honour due from the people to their paſtors, 1 Theſſ. v. 13. Heb. xiii. 17. 1 Cor. ix. 11. 2 Tim. v. 17. Gal. vi. 6. This cannot be denied. They are bound to pay it by all inſtances of regard and kindneſs. He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophet's reward, Matt. x. 4.

2. This honour hath its bounds and meaſures. It is due for the ſake of their maſter and their work, and in proportion to their faithfulneſs and labours. Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, eſpecially they who labour in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. v. 17. But we need not put out our eyes, that they may lead us whither they pleaſe; nor are bound to pay that honour to the ſervants and ſtewards which is only due to their Lord and maſter.

3. That we may give them all due honour, though we do not think them infallible. This the Apoſtle ſuppoſeth in the text. For though he had required this eſteem from the people towards their paſtors, (ver. 13.) yet he commands them to prove all things. We are obliged to honour our judges and civil magiſtrates, and may truly do it, though we do not believe every ſentence and determination of theirs to be according to exact truth and equity.

For our judges in civil matters we are obliged to ſit down by their ſentence, when we do not think it juſt; we are to ſuffer wrong, and not reſiſt. It does not hence follow that we muſt follow our ſpiritual guides without examining. The civil magiſtrate determines only our outward actions, or diſpoſeth of ſome of our goods and properties (which we have power to alienate) but he does not preſcribe upon our inward ſenſe, nor touch upon our conſcience as our ſpiritual guides do in their commands. And though we do not appeal from the civil magiſtrate, it cannot hence be inferred that we think him infallible.

III. But this doctrine, ſome will ſay, will leave us at great uncertainty, and our ſalvation will be very contingent and hazardous, unleſs we be provided of an infallible guide, without whom we cannot be ſafe. And that God hath made a ſlender proviſion for our ſouls, if we be not thus provided for. To which I anſwer,

1. We are not fit judges of what God ought to do, but ought to thank him for what he hath done. We diſcourſe at random, and very inconſequently when we undertake to ſay what is fit for God to do, and then infer he hath done what we judged fit for him to do. At this rate we may as well infer that God hath eſtabliſhed a ſovereign umpire to decide all civil controverſies about meum and tuum. For, ſince theſe things divide the world, and are occaſions of feuds and wars, it may be as fairly ſaid that this is for the intereſt of the world, as an infallible judge is for that of the Church. Shall we then conclude that God hath appointed ſuch an one, or elſe he had been wanting to his creatures? It is for the intereſt of the Church that the members of it ſhould be free from poſſibility of ſinning as well as of erring, and yet we know God hath made no ſuch proviſion. An infallible guide of manners is as neceſſary as ſuch a guide of controverſies, and yet we cannot ſay there is any ſuch. And then we have no cauſe to make ſuch a concluſion.

2. That ſuppoſing it neceſſary there ſhould be an infallible Judge, yet this would do us no good, unleſs we could be infallibly ſure of this infallible Judge. And there are two things in this caſe we muſt be infallibly certain of, viz. 1. That there is ſome infallible Judge. 2. Who that Judge is. Both theſe are neceſſary. We muſt be ſure of a treaſure firſt, and then know where it lies before we can have cauſe to boaſt of our wealth. So that

This ſerves for the reproof of thoſe who would deprive the people of that liberty which God hath given them. This is to deſpoil them of the great prerogative of their nature, and degrade them into a lower rank of being, which is the greateſt tyranny imaginable. There is nothing ſo much concerns mankind as religion and the intereſt of their immortal ſouls. We are here put upon trying or proving all things. Believe not every ſpirit (ſays John) but try the ſpirits whether they are of God, 1 John iv. 1. Chriſt bids the Jews ſearch the Scriptures. Surely then the Scriptures are not to be kept from the people: And they muſt be allowed their rule when they are obliged to prove all things. If they are obliged to give a reaſon of their hope, they muſt be allowed to examine its grounds. And finally,

This ſerves for the reproof of thoſe who do not uſe that liberty of examining which is allowed them; who neither know nor will underſtand: That are crafty and diligent in worldly affairs, but ſupinely negligent in their trueſt and greateſt intereſt. Too many are wedded to their faction and fond opinions, and both practice and preſcribe that which they condemn in others. Did they ingenuouſly examine things, and ſincerely ſeek the truth, they might eaſily avoid the errors and ſchiſms they may be juſtly charged with.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

Second Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,

TO THE THESSALONIANS.

The INTRODUCTION.

Paul having in his former Epiſtle, put the Chriſtians of Theſſalonica in expectation of ſeeing him again in their city, chap. iii. ver. 11. when he found that his intended journey was prevented, he ſent this ſecond Epiſtle, which is much to the ſame purpoſe as the former to encourage them in perſeverance, and comfort them in their ſufferings; ſhewing God's judgments on all thoſe that obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but the glorious reward which waited for them that obeyed. And,

Becauſe they miſtook his former Epiſtle in that part thereof, where he treated of Chriſt's coming to judgment, chap. v. ver. 1, &c. leſt they ſhould be heartleſs and waver in faith, becauſe it was not to be immediately, he in this ſecond Epiſtle, ch. ii. ſhews, that as he had told them formerly, that terrible judgment was not to fall on the ungodly, till after ſome things came to paſs, which he now mentions, viz. a great apoſtacy, or falling away from the faith, and the more plain diſcovery of antichriſt, or the grand oppoſer of Chriſt. Where

Note, Some, as Grotius and Hammond, in 1 Theſſ. v. 2. by the coming of Chriſt, and the day of Chriſt, mentioned chap. ii. ver. 1, 2. here, and in the former Epiſtle, chap. v. underſtand the coming of Chriſt to deſtroy the unbelieving Jews and their temple, of which they ſuppoſe the Chriſtians might be over inquiſitive to know the time; in which ſenſe the coming of Chriſt, as has been noted, is uſed in Matt. xxiv. 2, 3. and hereafter in James v. 7, 8, 9. But yet this paſſage ſeems to refer to the ſame time, which the like phraſe doth four times in the former Epiſtle, viz. ch. ii. 19. ch. iii. 13. ch. iv. 15. ch. v. 23. and that is to the Day of Judgment.

Then the Apoſtle, at ch. ii. 13, &c. returns again to encourage and comfort them; giving them ſome inſtructions, particularly to avoid idleneſs, and the diſorderly behaviour of ſome buſy-bodies, and ſo concludes with a Chriſtian Salutation.

CHAP. I.

1 Saint Paul certifieth them of the good opinion which he had of their faith, love and patience: And therewithal uſes divers reaſons for the comforting of them in perſecution, whereof the chiefeſt is taken from the righteous judgment of God.

PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Theſſalonians, in God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

2 Grace unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

3 We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, becauſe that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all towards each other aboundeth:

4 So that we our ſelves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your perſecutions, and tribulations that ye endure.

5 Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye alſo ſuffer:

6 Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you;

7 And to you who are troubled, reſt with us, when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels.

8 In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

9 Who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

10 When he ſhall come to be glorified in his ſaints, and to be admired in all them that believe (becauſe our teſtimony among you was believed) in that day.

11 Wherefore alſo we pray always for you that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleaſure of his goodneſs, and the work of faith with power:

12 That the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

The Apoſtle's ſcope in this chapter (after the Preface in ver. 1, 2.) is to comfort the perſecuted Theſſalonians under their preſent ſad ſufferings; for which end he propounds ſeveral grounds of conſolation to them: As,

I. The high eſteem he himſelf had of their graces, maniſeſted by his thankſgiving to God for them, ver. 3. and his boaſting of them upon theſe accounts in the Churches, through which he journeyed; amplified by the ground of it, their patience and faith ——, ver. 4

II. The ſignification or betokening of their ſufferings, viz. a glorious recompence at the day of judgment, ver. 5. proved by God's righteouſneſs or juſtice, which he explains in reſpect of,

(1.) The acts thereof, ver. 6—7.

(2.) The time when, at Chriſt's revelation, deſcribed by the glorious manner of his coming, in reſpect of his attendants, the glorious Angels, ver. 7. of the terror to the wicked, in flaming fire, and of the end, which is twofold.

(1.) In reference to the wicked, to take vengeance on them; amplified by the two ſorts of wicked, not knowers, and diſobeyers, ver. 8. and by the quality or kind of the vengeance, ver. 9.

(2.) In reference to the Godly, where we have a deſcription of the perſons, ſaints, believers, the end of his coming, to be glorified and admired in them; the ground of his application of this to the Theſſalonians; becauſe they believed, and the time, at that day, ver. 10.

III. His prayers to God for them, wherein we are to obſerve,

(1.) The matter, conſiſting of three branches, ver. 11.

(2.) The reſult or end propoſed to be brought about hereby, viz. Glory both to Chriſt and them.

(3.) The ground or motive, free grace, ver. 12.

Ver. 1. In God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] i. e. Who believe in God our Heavenly Father through Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 2. Grace, &c.] Salvation through the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and peace of conſcience in the midſt of all afflictions for the ſake of the Goſpel of truth.

Ver. 3. We.] See ver. 1.

——— Charity.] i. e. Love, by which Chriſt ſays his diſciples ſhall be known.

Ver. 4. —— We ourſelves glory in you, &c.] See 2 Cor. vii. 14. ix. 2. and 1 Theſſ. ii. 19.

——— That ye endure.] For the profeſſion of your faith; ſee 1 Theſſ. ii. 14. and below at ver. 5.

Ver. 5. —— The kingdom of God.] The Goſpel of Chriſt.

Ver. 6. —— To recompenſe tribulation.] In the day of eternal judgment; ſee ver. 8, 9.

Ver. 7. —— Who are troubled.] By the power and malice of the Devil, or man.

——— Reſt.] See ver. 10.

Ver. 12. May be glorified in you.] By your patience in afflictions and tribulations before men.

——— And ye.] Shall alſo be glorified in the ſight of all men at the day of univerſal judgment, ſee ver. 10.

CHAP. II.

1 He craveth their prayers for himſelf, 3 teſtifieth what confidence he hath in them, 5 maketh requeſt to God in their behalf, 6 giveth them divers precepts, eſpecially to ſhun idleneſs, and ill company. 16 And laſt of all concludeth with prayer and ſalutation.

NOW we beſeech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by our gathering together unto him,

2 That ye be not ſoon ſhaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by ſpirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Chriſt is at hand.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day ſhall not come, except there come a falling away firſt, and that man of ſin be revealed, the ſon of perdition:

4 Who oppoſeth and exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, or that is worſhipped; ſo that he as God ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God.

5 Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you theſe things?

6 And now ye know what withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the myſtery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then ſhall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy with the brightneſs of his coming:

9 Even him whoſe coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and ſigns, and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs in them that periſh; becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved.

11 And for this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lie:

12 That they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs.

13 But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, becauſe God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth:

14 Whereunto he called you by our goſpel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

15 Therefore, brethren, ſtand faſt, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epiſtle.

16 Now our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation, and good hope through grace, 17 Comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good word and work.

In this chapter the Apoſtle rectifies their judgment concerning the time of Chriſt's coming to judgment: (1.) Giving them a caution againſt that ſpreading error of the proximity of Chriſt's ſecond coming, ver. 1, 2, 3 — And, (2.) A confutation of the forementioned error from two neceſſary antecedents of Chriſt's coming; as firſt, a general apoſtacy, and then the revelation or appearance of Antichriſt, whom he deſcribes, ver. 3, 4, 5. ſhews the time of his appearance, ver. 6, 7, 8 — the certainty of his deſtruction, ver. 8. and the continuance of his reign, ver. 9. and ſo concludes with a deſcription of his ſubjects and their eternal ſtate of puniſhment, ver. 10, 11, 12. Then

He comforts them againſt the power and terror of this apoſtacy, ver. 13, 14. Exhorts them to the uſe of means for the preventing of ſeduction, ver. 15. and concludes with prayer for their comfort and eſtabliſhment, ver. 16, 17.

Ver. 7 —— He who now letteth.] i. e. He who perſecuteth you, and hindreth the open profeſſion of the Goſpel.

Ver. 9 —— After the working of Satan, &c.] See Deut. xiii. 1. Matt. xxiv. 24. Rev. xiii. 13.

Ver. 11 —— Shall ſend them ſtrong deluſion.] Or permit them to be deluded by the working of Satan. See ver. 9.

Ver. 12 —— The truth of the Goſpel.] Of the Goſpel.

—— Unrighteouſneſs.] In diverſe luſts and falſe doctrines.

Ver. 13. —— Choſen you.] Becauſe ye have had pleaſure in the truth.

Ver. 14 —— Our Goſpel.] i. e. Our preaching of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 15. Therefore, brethren, ſtand faſt, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our Epiſtle.] Here the Apoſtle expreſly cautions, and indeed commands the Theſſalonians to beware of, and not to embrace any doctrines, but thoſe which he had taught them in perſon, or by his miniſters, whom he had ſet over them, or by his written epiſtles.

CHAP. III.

1 He craveth their prayers for himſelf, 3 teſtifieth what confidence he hath in them, 5 maketh requeſt to God in their behalf, 6 giveth them divers precepts, eſpecially to ſhun idleneſs, and ill company. 16 And laſt of all concludeth with prayer and ſalutation.

FInally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free courſe, and be glorified even as it is with you;

2 And that we may be delivered from unreaſonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith.

3 But the Lord is faithful, who ſhall ſtabliſh you, and keep you from evil.

4 And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do, and will do the things which we command you.

5 And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Chriſt.

6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye withdraw your ſelves from every brother that walketh diſorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.

7 For your ſelves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not our ſelves diſorderly among you,

8 Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travel night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

9 Not becauſe we have not power, but to make our ſelves an enſample unto you to follow us.

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither ſhould he eat.

11 For we hear that there are ſome which walk among you diſorderly, working not at all, but are buſy-bodies.

12 Now them that are ſuch, we command, and exhort by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work, and eat their own bread.

13 But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing.

14 And if any man obey not our word by this epiſtle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be aſhamed.

15 Yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother.

16 Now the Lord of peace himſelf give you peace always, by all means. The Lord be with you all.

17 The ſalutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epiſtle: ſo I write;

18 The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

¶ The ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, was written from Athens.

This chapter contains ſeveral particulars by way of exhortation, direction, &c. as an exhortation to pray for himſelf, and other faithful miniſters, ver. 1, 2. An encouragement and comfort againſt fear of falling from the truth, ver. 3. His charitable confidence of their obedience, both preſent and future, ver. 4. His prayer for them, ver. 5. A command concerning the reviving of Church Diſcipline, ver. 6—12. An exhortation to well-doing, ver. 13. An exhortation concerning the cenſuring of delinquents, ver. 14, 15. Then he concludes the Epiſtle with a prayer for peace, and God's preſence with them, ver. 16. and his ſalutation, ver. 17. and laſtly, with his Apoſtolical bleſſing, ver. 18. And,

Now from the whole of the two Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, it may be obſerved,

1. That obedience to all God's commands is a neceſſary duty, to which all men are obliged by natural religion.

II. That therefore we can challenge no reward from God, as due to ſuch obedience.

III. That we are obliged to obſerve and practiſe many things, which God has not commanded, to render our obedience to his laws more perfect, and ſo more acceptable to him. See 2 Theſſ. iii.

That tho', in ſuch inſtances, we may ſeem to have done more than God commands, that is, more than he has any where expreſſly required of us; yet we have therein done no more than what is certainly our duty by the law of nature, and what, by conſequence from his commands, all men are obliged to do. See Luke xvii. 10.

V. And laſtly, that though after we have done our beſt, in obedience to the will of God, we are but unprofitable ſervants; our beſt endeavours and performances being utterly incapable of merit: Yet he is faithful who has promiſed, and therefore we have all the reaſon in the world to reſt aſſured, that, provided we are careful to perform our part the moſt and beſt we can, he will undoubtedly reward us according to his promiſe. See 2 Theſſ. chap. i. ver. 7.

I. Obedience to all God's commands is a neceſſary duty; to which all men are obliged by natural religion.

The neceſſity of ſuch obedience is plainly hinted by our Saviour, in that he ſays, When ye have done all thoſe things which are commanded you, Luke xvii. 10. thereby ſuppoſing, and taking it for granted, that the diſciples knew it was their duty to obey all God's commands, without his telling them they ſhould do ſo. For,

1. They could not poſſibly be ignorant of their duty ſo to do; it being ſo expreſſly, and ſo frequently inculcated by God himſelf, in the writings of Moſes and the Prophets, which they knew and owned to be the Word of God, and therefore muſt conclude, that whatever was inculcated therein, was undoubtedly their duty, and that their obligation to it could not be diſpenſed with. But,

2. They might have known their duty to obey all God's commands, though it had not been externally revealed unto them; it being eaſy for them to diſcover, that they were obliged to do ſo by the light of nature only. For, having firſt diſcovered by that light the being of a God, who by his providence governs the world, and ſuperintends all human affairs; it muſt follow, of neceſſity, that they ought to be obedient to his will, in all reſpects, from the following conſiderations.

Firſt, That he has an abſolute right to diſpoſe and order all things as he pleaſes. For it is a natural, and therefore an uncontroverted principle. That wherever ſuch a right is found, there obedience is indiſputable and indiſpenſible; it being evident, by nature's light, that he who has ſo abſolute a right to diſpoſe and order all things, muſt alſo have as abſolute a right to the ſervice and obedience of all things; ſince ſuch a right muſt needs ſuppoſe an equally abſolute and uncontroulable power of making and impoſing whatever laws he pleaſes, and this, again, ſuppoſes the neceſſity of an unlimited obedience to be paid to all the laws he makes, by all that are at his diſpoſal; that is, by all mankind.

Now as all men own a God, who are inſtructed by, and hearken to the dictates of right reaſon, ſo all muſt own themſelves, and all they have, to be at his diſpoſal; and that therefore their obedience to all his laws is a juſt and neceſſary duty. For, to ſuppoſe a God, who can diſpoſe of all men, and order all men as he pleaſes, and yet has no ſuch right to their obedience, nor power to oblige them to it, is to ſuppoſe a contradiction; ſince both parts of the ſuppoſition cannot poſſibly be true: For if the affirmative be true, the negative is falſe; and if the negative be true, the affirmative is falſe; or elſe he is, and is not God, which is utterly impoſſible. My meaning is, that if he has not ſuch an abſolute right to our obedience, and power to oblige us to it, he neither is, nor can be God; and conſequently, if he be, he muſt have ſuch a right and power: And on this latter ſuppoſition, which is undoubtedly moſt true, it follows unavoidably, that obedience to all his laws is our neceſſary duty. And,

Secondly, Our duty to obey all God's commands, will appear to be neceſſary, as well as juſt and reaſonable, if we conſider the dependance all men have upon his providence, for their well-being in the preſent life.

Paul tells the Epicurean and Stoick philoſophers at Athens, In him, that is, in God, we live, and move, and have our being; as certain alſo of your own poets have ſaid, For we are alſo his off-ſpring, Acts xvii. 28. By which he ſhews, that even the very Heathens were not without ſome ſenſe of the original of man, that he is the off-ſpring of God, as to his ſoul, as well as the workmanſhip of God, as to his body; or, at leaſt, that as to both, all men have their being from him: And that they had a notion of that manifeſt dependance, which all men have upon the providence of God, for the ſupport and comfort of their being; that their life, motion, and ſubſiſtence is wholly owing to him; and that it is from his good providence alone, that they receive, and muſt expect whatever is needful for, and advantageous to their being and well-being.

Now, if it be thus, and there is all the reaſon in the world to believe that ſo it is; then it is certainly the duty of all men, to be obedient to all his laws, on whom their ſole dependance is. For ſo it is, with reference to all created beings; every inferior is ſubject, and obedient to the laws of his ſuperior, by whom he is protected, and provided for. Even in brute creatures this is manifeſt: The ox knoweth his owner, and the aſs his maſter's crib, Iſa. i. 3. And another Prophet tells us, The ſtork in the Heaven knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle, and the crane, and the ſwallow obſerve the time of their coming, Jer. viii. 7. That is, theſe creatures conſtantly obſerve, and are obedient to the laws of their creation; ſo as to anſwer, moſt exactly, the ends for which they have their being. And ſurely, man has his for ſome end too: And what ſhould that end be, but the ſervice of his Maker and Preſerver? If God by his power has created man; and by his goodneſs made him what he is, ſo much ſuperior to all viſible, corporeal beings; and by his providence continues him in being, and takes care for his well-being: There is undoubtedly ſome duty owing, nay, the higheſt duty ſhould be paid by man to God, as to him, from whom alone he has his being, and on whom only he depends, for whatſoever he can need, to make him happy. So that, our ſo manifeſt dependance on the providence of God, is another cogent reaſon for our beſt obedience to his commands. And,

Thirdly, another reaſon for it, is our manifold experience of his goodneſs, in the many benefits he daily heaps upon us.

As it is from him alone, that we at firſt received our being; and as our ſole dependance is upon his providence, for all things neceſſary to our well-being: So it is only from his goodneſs, that we have, and do enjoy thoſe things. For, whatever means, or inſtruments, he may make uſe of, for conveying all our good things to us; he is the ſource and fountain, from whence they flow originally, and therefore our firſt and beſt acknowledgments are due to him: And if we do not pay them firſt to him, to whom undoubtedly, they are firſt due, we may very well expect in juſtice, to be looked upon, as not only moſt ungrateful to him, but moſt unworthy of his favour. Now it is very natural for all men, and no more than what may reaſonably be expected, to be inclined, and always ready as much as in them lies, to oblige their benefactors: And certainly it is much more our duty to make him what returns of gratitude we can, who is our firſt and greateſt, and in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe, our only benefactor. And ſince we have no other way of expreſſing our gratitude to him, for all his favours, ſo frequently, though undeſervedly vouchſafed us, than by our juſt obedience to his commands; this, as it is the moſt that he expects, ſo it is the leaſt that we can pay, and therefore, it is undoubtedly the duty of all men by natural religion, if there were no revelation to enforce it, to do their utmoſt to perform it. And,

Fourthly, Another reaſon, why we ſhould obey all God's commands, is, that he makes ſo plentiful proviſion for our happineſs, ſo by his providence he always watches over us, to preſerve us from, or deliver us out of, the many frequent dangers to which we are obnoxious and expoſed.

As the preſent life is full of trouble, ſo it is no leſs full of danger; ſo that, were it not for the watchful care of a never-ſleeping providence, we ſhould not only not be happy, but in very little time, from our firſt appear in the world, we ſhould not be at all. My meaning is, not that we can be totally deprived of being, ſo as to be no where, by becoming nothing; for not only revelation, but even natural reaſon alſo will inform us, that God has otherwiſe determined for us, that we ſhall be always ſomething, and always in ſome ſtate of being, though not always in the ſame: But, as to our preſent ſtate, ſuch and ſo many are the dangers that attend us, and ſo various are the accidents, to which we are continually expoſed; that almoſt whatever we are doing, or which way ſoever we are going, it is wholly owing to his providential care, that we eſcape being taken off much ſooner than we are, and we have reaſon to eſteem each other moment's reſpite from the grave, next to, if not indeed, a miracle. Since, therefore, God ſo watches over us, and all men muſt acknowledge, that not only their deliverance from whatever dangers they have been at any time encompaſſed with, but their preſervation likewiſe, from thoſe many others, to which they are obnoxious, and which might overtake them, are both owing, not to their own ſagacity and foreſight, but to his providence and care; we cannot do too much in obedience to his will, who always does ſo much for our ſafety and defence. In ſhort; as the firſt natural motive to obedience to all earthly higher powers, is their preſerving to us our juſt rights, and protecting us from all the wrongs we might otherwiſe receive, either from our foes at home, or from our foreign enemies; ſo we have all the reaſon in the world to be obedient to all God's laws, becauſe, as all the bleſſings we enjoy do come originally from him, and are continued to us by his goodneſs; ſo our protection and deliverance from all dangers, whether foreign or domeſtick, are principally owing to the watchfulneſs and care of his good providence, without whoſe permiſſion, our Saviour has aſſured us, Not a hair of our head ſhall fall to the ground, Matt. x. 30. For this we may conclude to be the ſenſe of what he there affirms, as moſt agreeable to what he ſays, with relation to the ſparrows, in the verſe before; that though they are ſo very cheap, yet not one of them ſhould fall to the ground, but by Divine Permiſſion, ver. 29 To which he adds immediately, but the very hairs of your head are all numbered. As if he had ſaid, God has the knowledge, and care, and overruling of even the leaſt things that belong to you, or that may befal you; ſo that no evil can happen to you, without his appointment, or permiſſion.

Fifthly, Another, and the laſt reaſon I ſhall mention, for obedience to God's commands, is the apprehenſion all men have, by nature's light alone, without the help of revelation, of a future ſtate of happineſs, or miſery.

That the Heathens did believe the immortality of the ſoul, though they had no other light than that of nature, whereby they might diſcover it, is very plain, from what the Roman orator has ſomewhere told us; Permanere animas arbitramur, conſenſu nationum omnium: We ſuppoſe, ſays he, that ſouls live after death, from the conſent, or ſuffrage, of all nations. And if they did believe the ſoul to be immortal, they had, undoubtedly, ſuch apprehenſions of its future ſtate, as were moſt ſuitable to that belief; to wit, that the ſoul, after it left the body, would paſs into a ſtate of happineſs or miſery. For though their notions of the future ſtate were very imperfect and obſcure, if compared with the ſo much clearer knowledge we have of it by the light of revelation; yet they believed the thing in general that there would be a future ſtate, in which the ſouls of all men ſhould ſurvive their bodies, and be either happy or in miſery, according as they had deſerved in this life: And though their apprehenſions of that future happineſs or miſery were very far from being juſt and true; yet, that they had ſome apprehenſions of theſe things, is what cannot be denied, their authors, of all kinds, being full of teſtimonies to this purpoſe.

And then, if all men had, and we, by conſequence, might have ſuch apprehenſions of a future ſtate of happineſs or miſery by the light of nature, ſuppoſing there never had been any revelations of theſe things; what more powerful motive can there be imagined to a juſt obedience to the laws of God, than the hope and proſpect of a future ſtate of happineſs, or the dreadful apprehenſion of a future ſtate of miſery? And that which makes the motive ſtronger yet, is the durableneſs of that future ſtate; that it will be a ſtate of happineſs or miſery to all eternity. For though the Gentiles, probably, did not know, or were not apprehenſive of this truth, in all reſpects by nature's light; yet we now know it clearly by the light that revelation has afforded us: And even they might have ſuppoſed it too, though they had no ſuch revelation to inſtruct them in it. For if, as they commonly believed, thoſe that were happy in the future ſtate, were to be always ſo; they might reaſonably thence infer, if they had not been ſo prone to overſtrain God's mercy, to the leſſening of his juſtice, that thoſe who in the future ſtate were in miſery for any time, were likewiſe to be always miſerable: The latter being a condition as unalterable as the former; ſo that as there can be no change for the worſe, neither can there be any alteration for the better; but into which ſoever ſtate men enter into firſt, therein they will and muſt remain for ever.

And thus, I think, it does ſufficiently appear ſufficiently plain, that obedience to God's commands is a neceſſary duty, to which all men are obliged by natural religion. I ſay, by natural religion; for though the Gentiles, who had not the written law of God, could not be ſuppoſed to know all things that he had in that law commanded; nor, conſequently, could it be expected of them in that ſtate, that they ſhould obey all thoſe commands, as ſuch: Yer, whatever they could by nature's light diſcover to be the will of God, ſuch a diſcovery, no doubt, had the force of a command; and they were undoubtedly as much obliged to do that thing, and their conſciences would as vehemently accuſe them if they did it not, as if God had, in any plainer manner, revealed it to them. Nay, the Apoſtle plainly intimates, that the Gentiles did thoſe very things by nature which were commanded in the written law, Rom. ii. 14. And this, very probably they did, ſuppoſing, from the naked reaſon of the things, that if God were to declare his will by word of mouth, he would command thoſe very things, which they conceived to be their duty to perform: And ſo, tho' they had not the law, they were a law unto themſelves.

However, thus much may for certain be diſcovered by the light of nature; that they to whom God has revealed his will more plainly, are undoubtedly obliged to be obedient to it: And this makes out the truth of what I firſt affirmed, though nothing more were to be ſaid whereby to prove it. For, if we are aſſured that God has ſo revealed his will, reaſon will tell us, that we ought to live and act, in all reſpects, according to it. And this is what I firſt intended, in affirming, that obedience to all God's commands is a neceſſary duty, to which all men are obliged by natural religion.

But farther, I affirmed it to be equally our duty to obey all God's commands; and the reaſon is, becauſe he has an abſolute inherent right to our obedience, which makes it our duty at all times, and upon all occaſions, to to do whatever he requires of us. And therefore, if, as our Saviour tells us, We are unprofitable ſervants, when we have done all thoſe things that are commanded us, Luke xvii. 10. we muſt needs be more unprofitable, and conſequently more unworthy of the Divine Favour and acceptance, if we leave any thing undone that God commands. And now,

II. Since obedience to all God's commands is our neceſſary duty, therefore we can challenge no reward from God, as due to ſuch obedience.

And this is plainly taught us. For, our Saviour ſays, When ye have done all thoſe things which are commanded you, ſay, We are unprofitable ſervants, we have done that, or only that, which was our duty to do, Luke xvii. 10. Now,

An unprofitable ſervant is one who does his maſter no more ſervice, than barely what he had agreed to do when he contracted with him, as either ploughing his ground, or feeding his cattel, or the like; not conſidering, that it is the duty of all ſervants to do their maſters any other lawful ſervice, that may either pleaſe, or bring advantage to them.

Or we may take it thus, that an unprofitable ſervant is one, who having not contracted to do any one particular kind of work, and ſo is equally obliged to every thing that his maſter thinks of ſetting him upon, will do no more than juſt what he is from time to time commanded and required to do: But, for any other buſineſs, which his maſter does not think to tell him of, or does not bid him do, though he might pleaſe his maſter in it, and perhaps promote his intereſt by ſuch a piece of voluntary ſervice, yet he is careleſs of it, and neglects to do it, upon the ſole account of its being not commanded, and for that reaſon more than what he is by contract bound to do.

Now, in either of theſe caſes, the ſervant is unprofitable, in that he does not any thing to promote his maſter's intereſt, or to procure his favour, but barely what he is obliged to do by contract or expreſs command. And ſuch a ſervant can challenge no reward, no, not ſo much as thanks, from his maſter, for his ſervice. For wages, which he may demand, is not reckoned a reward, but debt, as due to the performance of ſuch ſervice as by agreement ought to be performed. And

This is only with reſpect to men: For, with reſpect to God, there is no wages due from him for any ſervice we can do. For all men, as his creatures, to whoſe obedience he has an abſolute and unconditional right, are obliged to do him ſervice in whatever he commands, though they expected nothing for their pains. And it is on this account, that what is called wages, with reſpect to men, as due, and to be paid by them; with reference to God, is ſtiled a gift: Becauſe, whatever things he vouchſafes to any perſon, either as to this life or a better, cannot on any ſcore be ſaid to be his due, but are the iſſues and effects of pure undeſerved grace and favour. Men may, indeed, and all men do deſerve to meet with juſtice from him, that is, to be puniſhed for their ſins, both at preſent and hereafter; but no man can be ſaid to merit any favour from him in the preſent, and much leſs in the future life: For, though ſalvation be by merit, yet it is by no means ours, but his who took our nature on him, and by his obedience and ſufferings therein on our account, has merited ſalvation for us, on the conditions of the Goſpel; even the eternal Son of God. Therefore death is properly ſtiled the wages of ſin, as juſtly due to men for ſin; but eternal life is truly ſtiled the gift of God, becauſe no man can expect it by deſert, but only from the free and undeſerved mercy of a gracious God, and upon the ſole account of the merit of his Son: For, ſo the Apoſtle tells us, The wages of ſin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Rom. vi. 23.

So that, ſuppoſing any man were capable of doing, and did actually perform all the known duties of religion, all that God has any where, or any how commanded, though his obedience ſhould extend in the moſt perfect, equal and impartial manner poſſible, to all God's laws without exception: Yet he would therein do no more than what is undoubtedly his duty, no more than what he is obliged to do; and therefore, he can challenge no reward from God, as due to ſuch obedience, becauſe, let him do what he can, he cannot merit any. And now,

III. We are obliged to obſerve and practiſe many things, which God has not commanded, to render our obedience to his laws more perfect, and ſo more acceptable to him.

To make this matter plain; God has indeed revealed his will unto us in a manner very plain, and eaſy to be underſtood; he has taught us what to do, and, generally, how we ought to do it, that we may pleaſe him, and be happy. But he has left much to our own prudence and diſcretion, which he expects we ſhould exert in ſuch a manner, as that the performance of our duty may be and tend, the moſt and beſt it can, to the due advancement of his honour and glory, the promotion of the true intereſt of religion, and the furtherance of other mens both preſent and eternal welfare.

To all theſe purpoſes, we are obliged duly to weigh all theſe circumſtances, that may at any time attend the performance of our duty; and wiſely conſider how we may beſt perform it, ſo as it may beſt comport with God's moſt wiſe and juſt deſigns, in making it our duty, and moſt effectually anſwer and promote the ends, for which we are required to perform it. For, elſe a man may do what God commands, according to the letter of the precept, and ſo may, in a ſenſe, be ſaid to have performed his duty; and yet he may be very far from having done it well, and as he ought to do it: Becauſe he did not well conſider and duly weigh the circumſtances with which, at ſuch a time, his performance of it was attended. I might give many inſtances, by way of illuſtration; but at preſent, three or four ſhall ſerve for all.

And firſt, one circumſtance to be conſidered, that the performance of our duty may be right, and as it ought to be, is, the right timing of it. For, the timing of a duty is very often of vaſt importance to it; ſo that, let the action or duty be never ſo good or neceſſary, if well and rightly timed, yet, if it be not, it may be neither good nor neceſſary, no, nor proper to be done.

To give an inſtance only in one caſe; we are commanded not to hate our brother in our heart, but in any wiſe to rebuke our neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him, Lev. xix. 17. This, then, is a duty we are obliged to perform, becauſe God has commanded it, in any wiſe to rebuke, or reprove our neighbour, when we know him to be guilty of any ſin. But the time when this duty ought to be performed is not mentioned in the law; and yet we are not to ſuppoſe, that barely to reprove a man for ſin, at any time, will be taken for a due performance of this duty. For, though it be confeſſed, that whenſoever we reprove a man for ſin, we do according to the letter of the precept; yet, if we do not time it rightly, we may be very far from promoting the deſign, for which we muſt ſuppoſe it to be given. The deſign of the law, undoubtedly, is this, that we ſhould do our beſt to convince the ſinner of, and convert, and turn him from his ſin, that ſo we may bring glory to God, either by his ſalvation, if he repents, or by his heavier condemnation, if he will not hearken to us. But this we can have no juſt reaſon to expect, if our reproofs and admonitions are unſeaſonably exerted; as, if we ſo admoniſh or reprove a ſinner when he is drunk, either with liquor, or with paſſion; or, if in any other reſpect he be incapable of being bettered by it, reproof at ſuch a time is both unſeaſonable, and may chance to do more hurt than good. Since, therefore, the preſent time may often be improper for the performance of this duty; and ſince, as we are obliged to do it at ſome time or other, ſo we ought ſo to do it, that is, at ſuch a time, in which we have moſt reaſon to expect it ſhould have that effect upon the ſinner, as to bring that honour to God by his converſion, for which it is, or ought to be performed: It follows, that though the time is not expreſly mentioned in the law; yet it is our duty to conſider, when it is fitteſt to be done, and to pitch upon that time for doing of it, which, all other circumſtances duly weighed, appears moſt proper for the right and due performance of it to that end.

Secondly, Place is another circumſtance which ought to be regarded by us, as well as time in the performance of our duty. For though ſome duties are, and others ſeem to be confined to time and place; yet there are ſeveral others, which have neither time nor place preſcribed for the performance of them. And in ſuch caſes, as I have ſaid concerning time, ſo with reſpect to place, our duty will undoubtedly be beſt performed, that is, moſt effectually to the end for which we ſhould perform it, in that place, which appears to be moſt proper for it: And we ought to pitch upon that place, for doing any duty, in which we are convinced we may moſt effectually perform it.

For ſince the two main ends of doing any duty, are, to bring glory to God, and ſpiritual advantage to men; if our doing it in publick will more effectually promote thoſe ends, than our doing it in private; we ought to chuſe thoſe publick places to perform it in, where our performance of it is like to do moſt good. But if our doing it in ſuch a publick place does not apparently tend to either of thoſe ends, and privacy is manifeſtly more for our own ſpiritual advantage; then the more private place is better, as more proper for it. Nay, in ſome inſtances, a ſecret place may be more for the advantage, not only of our ſelves, but of others alſo; and then our duty will undoubtedly be beſt, becauſe it will be moſt effectually performed, in ſuch a place. And,

Thirdly, As we muſt have ſuch regard to time and place, ſo muſt we likewiſe to the manner of performing any duty: I mean, when the manner of performing it is not preſcribed. For it is only when theſe circumſtances are not determined, that we are left at liberty, and ought to chuſe that time, and place, and manner, which we think moſt fit and proper, in order to a right and due performance of our duty. Otherwiſe, it is our duty to attend to, and obſerve, and follow the preſcription of the law, whether it be Divine, or any human law that is not contrary thereto.

Now in thoſe inſtances of duty, as to which the manner of performances is not preſcribed, the rule we have, and ought to walk by is, ſo to perform it, that is, in ſuch a manner, as ſeems to us moſt likely to promote thoſe ends, for which we are obliged to do it. For, in a word, if we do perform our duty, in any inſtance, only according to the letter of the law, and have no due regard to the deſign of the law-giver in it, and ſo are careleſs of the manner, how we ought to do it, provided that it be but done; we may, indeed, be ſaid to have done in that reſpect, what we were bid to do; but it is certain, that we have not done our duty as we ought to do it, becauſe not in ſuch a manner, as we may very well ſuppoſe would have rendered our performance of it much more effectual to the great and glorious ends and purpoſes, for which it was preſcribed. And now,

Fourthly, Another circumſtance, and the laſt that I ſhall mention, which ought chiefly to be heeded by us; that we may effectually perform our duty, has relation to the means we ought to uſe, in order thereunto: There being ſome ſuch means to be made uſe of, and to which we ought to have recourſe in ſeveral inſtances of duty, without the uſe of which we cannot hope, much leſs expect, or promiſe to our ſelves, that we ſhall at any time, in any place, or after any manner do our duty, as we ought to do it. And it is chiefly with reſpect to the uſe of all ſuch means, that I ventured to affirm, that all men are obliged to obſerve and practiſe many things, which God has not commanded, to render their obedience to his laws more perfect, and ſo more acceptable to him.

For though God preſcribes the duty, and commands us to perform it; yet the law is often ſilent, as to the means we ought to uſe, in order to a right and acceptable performance of it. And yet we are as much obliged to the uſe of all ſuch means, in order thereunto, as if they had been expreſly ordered by him. For if the duty cannot be ſo well performed, that is, to ſuch a meaſure of perfection as we are capable of, and leſs we cannot think he will accept; I ſay, if the duty cannot be ſo well performed, unleſs we uſe ſuch means in order to it; and if it be our neceſſary duty, to do our utmoſt, that we may ſo well and perfectly perform it: Then it is undoubtedly our duty, and we are by natural religion certainly obliged to uſe thoſe means that are moſt likely to promote that end, tho' in the law by which the duty is commanded there is no mention of them. For, as we are obliged to do whatever God commands, ſo we are certainly obliged to do it to as great perfection as we can; becauſe, otherwiſe, our obedience will be very lame, much ſhort of what it ought to be, and ſo unacceptable to him: And therefore, though the law may not expreſly, yet be ſure it does implicitly oblige us to the uſe of all thoſe means, not only that are abſolutely neceſſary, but that are fit and proper, or but convenient to be uſed, that we may ſo perform our duty, as God expects we ſhould.

And this obligation to the uſe of means, even of ſuch as are not mentioned, much leſs commanded, in the law by which any ſpecial duty is preſcribed, will appear ſufficiently plain, from the commiſſion and command our Saviour gave to his diſciples, To heal the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, raiſe the dead, and caſt out devils, Matt. x. 8. That is, to work all manner of healing miracles wheresoever they came, for all that needed, and deſired them to do ſo. I ſay, our Saviour hereby gave to his diſciples not only a commiſſion and authority, but likewiſe a command, and ſo made it their indiſpenſible duty, to be kind and charitable in theſe reſpects, to all that needed the exertion of that power, with which they were inveſted, wherever they ſhould come.

But now, all the means that he inculcated, as needful to be uſed to all theſe ends, were only of two ſorts; the uſe of his moſt powerful name, and faith: The neceſſity and uſefulneſs of which, to the working of ſuch miracles, may be collected from what he ſays on ſeveral occaſions to this purpoſe. But, it ſeems, there were ſome other means, as needful to be uſed as either of thoſe two, and through neglect of which, they ſometimes failed in the performance of thoſe acts of mercy. Of which we have an inſtance, not long after our Saviour had given them this commiſſion, in Matt. xvii. Where we are told, that a certain man having a ſon that was lunatick, brought him to the diſciples, expecting they ſhould cure him, as they had many others, but they could not. And when our Saviour had done it, at their requeſt he tells them why they had not power to perform it; to wit, becauſe they did not uſe thoſe means in order to it, which their own reaſon might not direct them to, though he ſhould never have enjoined them. This kind, ſays he, at ver. 21. goes not out, but by, or without, prayer and faſting. As if he had ſaid; If you would on all occaſions, according to your duty, cure diſeaſes and caſt out devils, you muſt do all thoſe things with all fidelity, which are means to that end, or never think you have performed your duty. When confidence of my power, and uſing the mention of my name will not caſt out devils, then ſolemn prayer is your duty, and muſt be ſuperadded to your faith; and when that and prayer both together will not do the buſineſs, you muſt add faſting alſo; and not think that it is free for you to do, or not to do theſe things, becauſe I did not tell you of them when I gave you this commiſſion and command, and, by conſequence, that if you do them, when they are not commanded, that it is eminent virtue, a work of ſupererrogation in you: But you muſt look upon the doing of theſe things, as your neceſſary duty, though they were not commanded; which when you have performed, you will have done no more, than what, by the duty you owe to God by nature, you are obliged to do. For,

IV. As I have already ſhewn, that all men are obliged by natural religion, to obey all God's commands; ſo it muſt needs be the duty of all men, by the ſelf-ſame light, or law of nature, to do whatever may be fit and reaſonable to be done, in order to the greater perfection of their obedience, though he has not commanded it.

Men, by the light of nature only, may diſcover it to be their neceſſary duty, to ſerve and obey God in the beſt and moſt perfect manner poſſible; and if they can think of any thing, that either does, or may conduce to the making of their ſervice and obedience more perfect, and more acceptable to him, even unaſſiſted reaſon will inform them, that it is certainly their duty to make uſe of that, and do that thing, as a neceſſary means to that end, though it be not commanded by him. And,

I may therefore ſafely venture to affirm, that in making uſe of all ſuch means, in order to our pleaſing God, which he has not commanded, we do more than what, by conſequence from his commands, we are undoubtedly obliged to do.

For, if we muſt perform whatever duty he requires of us; then, ſurely, nothing can be clearer than this conſequence, that he expects we ſhould perform whatever does any way conduce to a right and due performance of that duty. For in commanding ſuch a thing, and ſo making it our duty to perform it, he implicitly, at leaſt, requires of us our doing all ſuch other things, as we can any way diſcover to be fit or neceſſary in order thereunto.

So that, whatever ſome may fancy, concerning works of ſupererrogation, built upon erroneous traditions, by which they think they merit a more than ordinary reward from God; not only Scripture, but even natural reaſon is apparently againſt them. For, if all men muſt do what they can, by any means, in obedience to God's commands, to render their obedience and ſervice acceptable to him; ſurely no man can do more, and it would, to ſay no worſe, be a downright contradiction for any to affirm he can: And therefore, ſince it is impoſſible for any man to do more than he can do, and it is either abſolutely, or by neceſſary conſequence, required of all men, to do as much as poſſibly they can in the ſervice of their Maker; it follows unavoidably, that no man can do more than what is undoubtedly his duty; and, conſequently, he that does the moſt, according to our Saviour, who be ſure has told us nothing but the truth, can merit nothing for his pains.

God has, indeed, been pleaſed to promiſe many great and glorious rewards to them that faithfully obey him. But then, his promiſe does not make him any otherwiſe indebted to the beſt among us, but only as he is infinitely faithful, juſt and true: And ſo, as all our hopes of a reward from him, for what we do, to ſerve and pleaſe him, are founded in his free and gracious promiſe; ſo we muſt expect to have that great reward conferred upon us, not as a debt, but as a gift; not as our due for any thing that we are capable of doing in his ſervice, but as flowing from his undeſerved goodneſs, whereby he was excited firſt to promiſe ſuch a glorious reward to our imperfect ſervices; and from his faithfulneſs and truth, by which he will think himſelf obliged to make good his promiſes to us, though made upon the ſole account of ſuch a poor obedience as we are able, or rather willing to perform. And therefore,

V. After we have done our beſt, in obedience to the Will of God, we are but unprofitable ſervants; our beſt endeavours and performances being utterly incapable of merit: Yet he is faithful that has promiſed, Heb. x. 23. and therefore, we have all the reaſon in the world to reſt aſſured, that, provided we are careful to perform our part, the moſt and beſt we can, he will undoubtedly reward us, according to his promiſe.

It was the unfathomable goodneſs of an infinitely gracious God, that prompted him to promiſe ſuch unſpeakably great and glorious rewards to the (at beſt) imperfect ſervices of his unworthy creature, man, and he has been pleaſed to make his truth and faithfulneſs the pledge, for our ſecurity, that he will perform what he has promiſed to us. And what is it that we have done, or what that we can do, to merit ſo much grace and favour from him? Wherein can man, the very beſt of men, be profitable unto God? Even what is good in any of us, can be no advantage, nor bring any benefit to him. For, ſays Eliphaz to Job, Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wiſe may be profitable unto himſelf? Is it any pleaſure, or additional happineſs, to the Almighty, that any man is righteous? Or is it gain to him, that he makes his way perfect? Job xxii. 2, 3. As if he had ſaid, This cannot be. For God has infinite and perfect goodneſs and felicity in and of himſelf; a goodneſs, and felicity, incapable of any diminution or increaſe from any thing that any man on earth, nay, that any envious fiend in hell, or glorified Saint in Heaven, can attempt, or poſſibly perform.

What then, does he require of us, in return of ſo much love and goodneſs? Be ſure, not more than we can do; and one would think, we ſhould do what we can to pleaſe him. He is not ſo ſevere, though he very juſtly might, as to exact perfection of obedience from us; for that he knows to be impoſſible for ſuch frail creatures as we are, in this ſtate of imperfection to perform. No; all that he expects is, that we do our beſt; not that we ſhould be perfect, but ſincere: And if we are the latter, though we cannot be the former, he will accept of our endeavours, and according to his promiſe, eternally reward our willing, tho' imperfect ſervices, upon the ſcore, and for the ſake of the moſt perfect, and infinitely meritorious obedience of his well-beloved Son, and our all-ſufficient Saviour and Redeemer, Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore the Apoſtle concludes his Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians with this exhortation, Brethren, be not weary in well-doing, 2 Theſſ. iii. 13. and Gal. vi. 9.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,
ON THE
Firſt Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,
TO TIMOTHY.

The INTRODUCTION.

Paul had taken Timothy to travel with him, and to aſſiſt him in planting the Goſpel, Acts xvi. 3. He puts his hands on him; which ſome interpret, ordained him, with the aſſiſtance of the Presbytery, 2 Tim. i. 6. compared with this firſt Epiſtle, iv. 14. (as afterwards in the primitive Church the Biſhop ordained with the aſſiſtance of the Presbytery.) At length the Apoſtle is ſaid to conſtitute him Biſhop at Epheſus; (ſee Euſeb. hiſt. lib. 3. c. 4. Chryſoſt. hom. 15. in 1 Tim. v. 19. Hammond on the title to 1 Tim. and P. Cave's life of Timothy) and ſome time after that he wrote this Epiſtle to him. He calls him his ſon, as being converted by him to the Chriſtian Religion, whereby the Apoſtle became his ſpiritual father.

Timothy had been inſtructed in the Holy Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, ever ſince he was a child, by his grandmother and mother, being both religious Jeweſſes, and alſo become converts to Chriſtianity before him, Acts xvi. 1. 2 Tim. i. 5.

The deſign of this Epiſtle appears from chap. iii. 14, 15. that Timothy might know how to behave himſelf in the Church of God; that is, to inſtruct him how to diſcharge his great office, both as to his own behaviour, and alſo that of others, whether the inferior Clergy or people: And how to order ſome part of the publick ſervice by ſupplications, prayers, and giving of thanks; and warns him againſt ſome Judaizing, or other Hereticks and falſe teachers; particularly, not to give heed to their fables and genealogies, ch. i. nor to their doctrines forbidding of marriage and certain meats, ch. iv. See Grotius in ch. i. 4.

There are three paſſages in this Epiſtle to be particularly conſidered; [the firſt is in ch. ii. 14, 15.] where the Apoſtle ſays, women ſhould be in ſubjection to their huſbands, becauſe the woman (Eve) being deceived, was in the tranſgreſſion, i. e. being tempted by the ſerpent, which was the Devil, to eat the forbidden fruit, Gen. iii. 6. ſhe was firſt prevailed on, and ſo became the means of man's fall; but, for the comfort of the female ſex, he aſſures us that the woman notwithſtanding ſhall be ſaved in (or, διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας, i. e. by) child-bearing; which may import either that ſhe ſhould go through child-bearing pangs with ſafety, or elſe her ſoul ſhould be ſaved by child-bearing; that is, by Chriſt being born of a woman, the Virgin Mary; whereby the ſame ſex became alſo inſtrumental to man's ſalvation, as before it had been to his fall, and deſtruction.

2dly, Among the characters of a biſhop, ch. iii. 2. one is, that he be the husband of one wife, which may be underſtood as having but one wife at a time; ſee Biſhop Blackall's Sermons, vol. iii. page 319. whereas the Gentiles, before their converſion had ſometimes two or three; which they might be permitted ſtill to retain, even after they were baptized, to avoid confuſion, though Chriſtians were not ſuffered to be married to more than one, during the life of that one, after converſion; however, a plurality of wives was ſo far diſcouraged, that whoever had been married to more than one at the ſame time, while he was a Gentile, was not allowed to be put into the miniſtry, though he was a convert to Chriſtianity.

One objection againſt this interpretation is, That in this ſame Epiſtle, chap. v. 9. a widow was to be choſen into the ſervice of the Church, being the wiſe of one man; but a woman among the Gentiles was not allowed many husbands at once.

It is replied, that the caſe is different; and that if the phraſe in this laſt paſſage of ch. v. cannot be ſo interpreted, it does not therefore follow that the other may not. Another ſenſe of the husband of one wiſe may be, as not having divorced one wife, and taken another, as was uſual among Jews and Gentiles; ſee Hamond, in loc. Dr. Whitby on 1 Tim. v. 9. and on 1 Cor. vii. 11. And this ſenſe agrees with ch. v. 9. for women were wont to divorce themſelves, and marry another husband, among both Jews and Gentiles.

As for a third interpretation of not marrying a ſecond wife after the death of the firſt, but continuing a widower; it is true, ſome ancient canons enjoin this to the Clergy, (at the firſt, no doubt, on account of the Heathen perſecutions) but then the opinions and practice of the ancients varied in this matter: Some underſtanding the place of thoſe who had more wives than one at a time, as Theodoret, in loc. and Chryſoſt. in loc. or had put away one, and married another. However, it is very certain, ſome very ancient Biſhops of the orthodox Church, were married again after the deceaſe of a former wife; ſee Tertul. de Monogamia, c. 12. and Bingham's Antiq. Book iv. c. 5. And ſince the end of marriage is not only for the propagation of children, but alſo for mutual comfort, and a remedy againſt fornication; it cannot be conceived, why a firſt marriage ſhould be allowed for ſuch ends, and not a ſecond; when there may be as much occaſion, in order to ſuch ends, for a ſecond marriage, as for a firſt. But,

Be this as it will, it is certain, that the celibacy of the Clergy, which is enjoined by ſome part of the preſent Chriſtian Church is abſolutely condemned by this Epiſtle; for it ſhews that the ſtate of marriage is not prohibited to ſuch orders of men. If it be forbidden in Scripture; it lies upon our adverſaries to tell us where it is ſo: For, according to the laws of arguing, we are not to prove that it is not forbidden, but they are to prove that it is. Yet in this caſe, we can with great eaſe, do more than they can reaſonably demand of us. The example of Samuel, Ezekiel, and others in the Old Teſtament, and of Peter in the New: Who are all known to have been married men, are plain and clear. As is the doctrine of Paul, concerning the wives and children of biſhops and deacons, in this, as in other places: As alſo the practice of the primitive Church, and of all Churches, except that of Rome, ſince it became corrupt by ſo many ſhameful innovations, both in doctrine, and practice. Among which, that of impoſing yokes, and laying ſnares is none of the leaſt conſiderable. And the neceſſity of celibacy in the Clergy is a ſignal inſtance of both. It is an arbitrary, tyrannical, unlawful impoſition; and a ſnare to the conſciences of men. Eccleſiaſticks are moulded out of the ſame common maſs with laicks; and human nature is the ſame in thoſe as in theſe. In the Jewiſh Church, prieſts were not only permitted to marry; but the prieſthood it ſelf was hereditary. And whether among Jews, or Chriſtians, it would be very wonderful, if a ſtate ſanctified by God, in the ſtate of man's innocency, ſhould be improper, and even unlawful for men, who are ſanctified by him, and for him: Or, that what is the type of the union between Chriſt and his Church, ſhould be prohibited to thoſe who are the miniſters of the firſt, for the edification of the laſt. As to the Church of Rome in particular; it is to be admired, that ſhe who pretends to a ſupremacy over all other Churches, upon the foundation of Peter, ſhould ſo ſtrangely overlook his example in this inſtance. And that ſhe who calls marriage a ſacrament, ſhould think any ſacrament fit to be given by a prieſt, which is not fit to be received by him. In the Euchariſt, (according to her doctrine and practice) part of it is to be received by the prieſt only: So that ſhe denies half of one ſacrament to the laity, and another whole one, as ſhe calls it, to the Clergy: Both by her own authority; and without any manner of foundation, either in reaſon, Scripture, or antiquity.

How far the celibacy of Eccleſiaſticks in that Church may have affected their morals, I will not pretend to determine. Many reflections, we know, have been caſt upon them: But though I charitably hope, and verily believe, they are not all true; yet this is certain, that it would be better, if in all Churches where there have been ſons, and daughters, there had likewiſe been wives, of the Clergy.

Againſt the marriage of whom the civil ſociety at leaſt, can make no reaſonable objection: Since the former, by their children give ſo many pledges to the latter: And by reaſon of intermarriages between the families of ſpiritual, and temporal perſons, the ſtate and the Church may mutually apply to each other that of David to Amaſa, Art thou not of my bone, and of my fleſh? Whereas the Church of Rome, by enjoining celibacy upon her Clergy, ſeems to ſet up an intereſt, not only ſeparate from the ſecular government, but in oppoſition to it. And however the powers of the Church and of the ſtate may be, as they certainly are, in their original inſtitution, not only diſtinct from, but independent of each other; there is no doubt, but that the more their intereſts are intermingled, the more likely are both to proſper and flouriſh.

One great advantage in the married ſtate of the Clergy, is their fuller knowledge of the world, and their being experimentally acquainted with the various turns and habitudes of human nature. So that thoſe of all relations to whom many of us miniſter, may in ſome meaſure, and by way of humble remote analogy, apply to us what the Apoſtle obſerves concerning the high-prieſt of our profeſſion; We have not prieſts who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but are in all points tempted, like as we are, Heb. iv. 15. We cannot go on, and add, yet without ſin: That is not without falſhood to be affirmed, nor almoſt without blaſphemy to be imagined. God knows in many things we offend all; Clergy, as well as laity, and the beſt of both. We are not only tempted, but often foiled by temptation. Nor does our admitting that word, as applied to marriage, in the leaſt derogate from the truth of what I obſerve. Nay, I acknowledge, that the inconveniences which attend a married Clergy, are many, and great; and that ſundry temptations are adapted to that very ſtate of life as ſuch. But this is nothing to the point: All conditions in this world are ſubject to temptations, and inconveniences, to corruption, and ſin: And however, what the Apoſtle intimates concerning marriage, with relation to all Chriſtians, eſpecially in times of perſecution, may be particularly applied to the Clergy in all times, He that marries does well, and he that marries not does better, provided he be well aſſured, that he can avoid the dangers attending a ſingle life; I ſay, however true this may be, the only queſtions to our purpoſe are theſe two: Whether, any power upon earth has authority to make that unlawful in point of morality, which God left indifferent? And, Whether as the inconveniences are great on one ſide; ſo, all things conſidered, they are not greater on the other? As to the latter, the allowance of this ſtate to the Clergy appears to be leaſt exceptionable in point of prudence and expediency. And as to the former, to make it directly unlawful to any order of men, is certainly the height of preſumption: And we may with ſome variation apply to this caſe thoſe words of our Bleſſed Saviour, concerning marriage in general; What God hath at leaſt permitted to be joined together, let not man abſolutely put aſunder.

3dly, The widow indeed, mentioned chap. v. appears to be one altogether deſtitute, deprived of the help of both husband and child, and living an exemplary, pious, and devout life; of ſixty years of age, the wife of one husband, that is, either who had not been twice married; or, as others, who had not formerly, before converſion, parted with one husband, and married another, as I have already obſerved, was uſual among the Jews and Heathens. Such a one was to be received into the roll or liſt of thoſe who were maintained by the alms of the faithful, in the quality of ſervants of the Church, or deaconeſſes (as Phebe was, in Rom. xvi. 1.) who were to be employed for the relieving other deſtitute Chriſtians out of the Church's ſtock, and otherwiſe in the Church's ſervice, eſpecially towards thoſe of their own ſex, as in ſickneſs or when they were baptized, &c. it being more decent for them to attend on their own ſex on ſuch occaſions, than for deacons or other men to do it.

---- See more obſervations on this, and the following Epiſtle, in the Introduction to Titus: Therefore, I ſhall conclude this Introduction with obſerving, that this Epiſtle may be fitly ſtiled, Paul's directory for the management of the miniſterial office in the Church of God.

CHAP. I.

1 Timothy is put in mind of the charge which was given unto him by Paul, at his going to Macedonia. 5 Of the right uſe and end of the law. 11 Of Saint Paul's calling to be an Apoſtle, 20 and of Hymeneus and Alexander

PAUL an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is our hope;

2 Unto Timothy, my own ſon in the faith: Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

3 As I beſought thee to abide ſtill at Epheſus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightſt charge ſome that they teach no other doctrine,

4 Neither give heed to fables, and endleſs genealogies, which miniſter queſtions, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith: ſo do.

5 Now the end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned:

6 From which ſome having ſwerved, have turned aſide unto vain jangling;

7 Deſiring to be teachers of the law, underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm.

8 But we know that the law is good, if a man uſe it lawfully;

9 Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly and for ſinners, for unholy and profane; for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man-ſlayers,

10 For whoremongers, for them that defile themſelves with mankind, for menſtealers, for liars, for perjured perſons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to ſound doctrine,

11 According to the glorious goſpel of the bleſſed God, which was committed to my truſt.

12 And I thank Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the miniſtry;

13 Who was before a blaſphemer, and a perſecutor, and injurious. But I obtained mercy, becauſe I did it ignorantly, in unbelief:

14 And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, with faith, and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

15 This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners; of whom I am chief.

16 Howbeit, for this cauſe I obtained mercy, that in me firſt Jeſus Chriſt might ſhew forth all long-ſuffering, for a pattern to them which ſhould hereafter believe on him to life everlaſting.

17 Now unto the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, the only wiſe God, be honour and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

18 This charge I commit unto thee, ſon Timothy, according to the propheſies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightſt war a good warfare,

19 Holding faith and a good conſcience; which ſome having put away, concerning faith have made ſhipwrack.

20 Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaſpheme.

In this chapter (after the inſcription at ver. 1, 2.) Paul

I. Renews his charge formerly given to Timothy to reſtrain falſe teachers from preaching, ver. 3, 4. wherein he lays down ſeveral reaſons at ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Then he takes notice of his own call to the miniſtry, and the thanks due to God for it, ver. 12—17.

II. Gives him another charge, viz. To war a good warfare, ver. 18. and ſhews him by what means he muſt do it, holding faith, &c. amplified by the danger of neglecting theſe means, ver. 19. exemplified in the inſtance of Hymeneus and Alexander, amplified by their puniſhment with the end thereof, ver. 20.

Ver. 1—— Our hope.] i. e. Jeſus Chriſt, who is the hope of us Chriſtians, becauſe the ſubſtance of all our ſalvations conſiſts only in him.

Ver. 2. My own.] See the beginning of the introduction.

Ver. 3 —— Other doctrine.] Than that of Chriſt, which I have taught.

Ver. 4 —— Fables.] The Apoſtle ſeems to mean in this place, the fabulous hiſtories of the Jewiſh nation, which had been compoſed as allegories, and, by degrees, had obtained ſome credit of truth, a cuſtom too frequent in that nation.

—— Endleſs.] Or, whereof there can be no certain or final reſolution had, as they have no certain foundation.

—— Genealogies.] It is thought that the Apoſtle here reproves thoſe Jews who were not content with the genealogies of our Saviour, recorded by Matthew and Luke, but ſearched after ſome others, which it was not poſſible for them rightly to attain, becauſe Herod had burnt all the publick records, in which they were preſerved aforetimes, to extinguiſh all manner of authentick proof of David's deſcent.

Ver. 5. The end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned.] Here the Apoſtle having told Timothy what Chriſtians ought not to mind, proceeds to ſhew them their duty in what they ought to do. For,

He is here putting Timothy in mind of the charge he had given him to guard againſt the introducing of new doctrines into the Chriſtian Church; and to enable him the better to execute that charge, he gives him this view of the deſign of Chriſtianity, a ſwerving from which is the ſource of the groſſeſt errors; he gives him this key, as it were, into the whole Chriſtian inſtitution; the end of the commandment, or of the inſtitution, charge, or appointment, as the original word ſignifies, is charity, &c. See ver. 18. Where Chriſtianity is conſidered as an inſtitution of Heaven, enforced by Divine Authority; and the end of it is declared to be charity, &c. And,

Though the word charity in common ſpeech is uſed in a narrow ſenſe, to expreſs only ſome one branch of that extenſive charity which is the end of the commandment; ſometimes bounty to the poor; ſometimes a favourable opinion of our neighbours: Both theſe are particular exerciſes of that charity here ſpoken of; but neither any one of them, nor both of them together, are comprehenſive of the whole of that charity which is the end of the commandment; yet the original word which here, and in other places, ſee 1 Cor. xiii. and xiv. 1. is rendered charity, might as well be rendered love. Now this love includes in it univerſal benevolence, and the prevailing love of goodneſs.

1. This love includes in it univerſal benevolence, or a kind affection towards all rational beings, particularly towards thoſe of our own kind, with whom we have a ſpecial connexion, and to whom we have ſpecial opportunities to be beneficial; ſuch a kind affection as makes us ſincerely and heartily deſire their welfare and happineſs, as we do our own; and readily promote it, if it is in our power; or, if any one's happineſs is ſo perfect and fixed, that it cannot be increaſed or promoted by us to be well affected towards it, and rejoice in it. In like manner, as our ſelf-love leads us to conſult our own happineſs; our love to others lies in our being well-affected to theirs. And this good-will and affection to the happineſs of others, muſt not be confined to thoſe of our own kind, but extended to the whole rational world; and muſt riſe to the greateſt joy in the perfect and unalterable happineſs of the ſupreme mind, the Head and Father of the rational ſyſtem.

This is the principle of goodneſs or benevolence; ſo far as it may be ſuppoſed in the mind antecedent to all reflection on what paſſes within, all contemplation of our own affections and actions, all ſenſe of inward beauty and deformity.

That there is ſuch a diſpoſition of benevolence, or ſocial affection in human nature, independent of all deliberate views of ſelf-intereſt; and exerting itſelf oft-times without any other proſpect of advantage, but the pleaſure ariſing from the view of happineſs around us, and ſeeing others well; is a point, which may indeed be artfully and plauſibly diſputed by a ſort of faſhionable moraliſts, who are for new-moulding the human heart; and making a moral world of their own, as a certain philoſopher attempted to do a natural one, by reſolving all the ſprings of action in our breaſts into either a raſh and haſty, or a cool and deliberate ſelfiſhneſs; but every plain man is ſenſible of ſuch a benevolent principle in himſelf; who can, with an honeſt heart, ſay to his neighbour, I am glad to ſee you well; every one may be ſenſible of it, who will reflect what an immediate uneaſineſs he feels upon beholding a fellow-creature in pain or calamity; what an immediate joy he feels on beholding others happy around him, eſpecially if it is by his means; without being conſcious to himſelf of any ſuch ſelfiſh reflections as thoſe Philoſophers would reſolve this joy or uneaſineſs into; and who, withal conſiders what force in the mind that ſympathizing ſenſe has, when the mind is under no byaſs from the view of ſome private good interfering with the good of others. But,

2. This love includes in it, the love of the diſpoſition of goodneſs and kindneſs it ſelf, flowing from a ſenſe of the beauty and amiableneſs of it. That love which is the nobleſt, and ſhould be the governing principle in the rational nature, is not a mere diſpoſition of kindneſs from inſtinct; but a rational principle, animated by the love of goodneſs ariſing from a juſt ſenſe of its excellency and amiableneſs. There is a paſſage in the Prophecies of Micah; chap. vi. ver. 8. which plainly leads to this thought; where the Prophet mentions, among the things that are good, and which the Lord requires of us, to love mercy. 'Tis the property of a rational creature, that he is not only capable of diſcerning thoſe outward objects which fall under his ſenſes; and of a liking or averſion to them: But he is alſo capable of reflecting on his own mind; taking a view of his own inward affections; diſcerning a good or ill within, in the temper of the mind; and of loving good affections, and hating evil ones. And, as kindneſs and benevolence is the moſt amiable affection of the ſoul; the juſteſt principle of the exerciſe of it is the prevailing love of mercy and kindneſs: This is the moſt ſtrong and ſteady principle of the exerciſe of goodneſs and kindneſs; when the diſpoſition itſelf is loved, and from love to it is cheriſhed in the ſoul.

We may diſcern ſomething of the beauty and amiableneſs of goodneſs and kindneſs, compaſſion and generoſity, by reflecting on our own minds when we are at any time remarkably affected that way: We may have a moſt conſpicuous and affecting view of it, in beholding a character remarkably good and generous ſet forth to obſervation. If we will catch our ſelves in the natural excurſions of our thoughts, and the play of our own hearts, even in our moſt eaſy and careleſs hours; we ſhall find our minds often employed in forming ſuch characters; the moſt elegant pens have ſhewn the greateſt art in this way: In the view of ſuch an amiable picture it is natural for the heart to take part, and to feel the moſt lively touches of the love of goodneſs; to be intereſted in it, and engage for it: The force of ſuch a view is conſpicuous even on the moſt vicious and abandoned perſons; who, in viewing ſuch a character, are apt to be touched with remorſe for forſaken virtue; and can hardly eſcape feeling ſome inward admiration of what they behold, and forming ſome ſecret wiſhes that ſuch a character and ſuch actions were their own. And the more of goodneſs and kindneſs there be in any character, the more amiable and engaging is it: The contemplation and love of ſuch a fair form of virtue tends naturally, and even inſenſibly, to ſtrengthen the diſpoſition of goodneſs in our ſelves. And, if goodneſs, wherever it appears, commands eſteem and love, according to the degree of it, and is naturally viewed with pleaſure; it muſt certainly be ſuperlatively amiable in its higheſt perfection and brighteſt luſtre, in the bleſſed God the Father of mercies, who is love, and who delights in mercy.

Now, this love of goodneſs is the ſtrongeſt principle of the exerciſe of it; and ſerves to ſecure the conſtancy of it: This principle of a rational and prevailing love of goodneſs and kindneſs is not ſo liable to be ſhaken, by innumerable occurrences that will ſpoil a mere ſweetneſs of temper: The more our goodneſs grows into a rational habit and principle; the more able will it be to over-ballance the force of oppoſite affections, and ſtand proof againſt thoſe haſty ſallies of paſſion, which the ſweeteſt and kindeſt temper is liable to be overcome by, where kindneſs is from temper and inſtinct merely, and not from a ſettled rational principle.

And thus I have ſhewn what is contained in that love the Apoſtle here ſpeaks of. But the nature of it may be yet further illuſtrated, by mentioning ſome properties of it. And,

[1.] This love muſt be the prevailing and governing principle in the mind. Our other affections muſt be brought into ſubjection to it, and under the government of it: And thoſe unnatural paſſions, and exceſſes of our ſelf-affections, that are contrary to it, muſt be rooted out, and put far from us.

[2.] It is an univerſal and extenſive love. Not confined by narrow and particular diſtinctions, (though in a ſpecial manner exerciſed towards thoſe with whom we are joined by ſpecial ties) but extended to all mankind. Nay, our love muſt not be confined even to thoſe of our own kind: But we muſt be well-affected to the common and univerſal good of the whole rational world; and this exerciſe of love opens a joy to the mind that is poſſeſſed of juſt notions of God; from the ſatisfaction it has, that this general good and happineſs is ſecured, amidſt all events, by the perfectly good, wiſe, and powerful adminiſtration of the univerſal Governor of the world. Nor muſt our love be confined to the inferior and created part of the rational ſyſtem: But it muſt riſe to the higheſt eſteem of, and delight in, God, the Head and Father of it; whoſe character is, the perfection of goodneſs, joined with thoſe other properties which ſerve to ſecure the ſucceſsful, extenſive, and perpetual exerciſe of it: It muſt riſe to the pureſt joy, in the perfect and unalterable happineſs of that

Being, whoſe character the truly good and generous mind ſtands beſt affected to; an entire good affection to his perfectly wiſe and good adminiſtration; and an acquieſcence in every part of his diſpoſal of things. Thus our love muſt be extenſive and univerſal. But yet

It is to be obſerved, that the Holy Scriptures, in deſcribing the exerciſe of this love, do particularly inſiſt upon the ſeveral exerciſes of it towards thoſe of our fellow-creatures with whom we live and converſe; and to whom we have opportunity to be beneficial by it. And this may be for theſe two reaſons.

1. Becauſe the exerciſe of our love towards them is the ſpecial proof and tryal of the ſincerity of it: It is eaſy to pretend to love in caſes where there is no opportunity to put that pretence to the tryal; by beſtowing benefits on him whom we pretend to love, at any trouble or expence to ourſelves, or with the croſſing of our ſelf-appetites: But the proof of our love lies in the exerciſe of it towards thoſe to whom we can be beneficial.

2. Becauſe the true love of God is no other than the higheſt exerciſe of that ſame principle of benevolence and the love of goodneſs, which leads us to be kind and beneficent to our fellow-creatures; namely, as it is exerciſed towards a being of perfect and unalterable goodneſs, the Head and Father of the rational creation; by whoſe wiſe and good government the univerſal good and general happineſs is ſecured; in which is included the particular happineſs of all thoſe whoſe ſouls, by the means his infinite wiſdom and goodneſs has been pleaſed to afford them, are formed into the temper of bliſs, and fitted to enter into the joy of the Lord. And our love to God is not only to be exerciſed in thoſe inward acts of eſteem and admiration, delight and joy, above-mentioned; but alſo in concurring with the deſigns of his goodneſs; and in ſubſtantial and beneficial effects; not to him indeed, to whom we cannot be profitable, but to thoſe to whom he requires us to be beneficent, as we love him. For,

3. That love which is the end of the commandment is an active and operative principle. In ſo far as it prevails in the ſoul, it will be exerted not in faint wiſhes and ineffectual deſires of the welfare of others; but will prompt us to do them real benefits, as we have opportunity; and the beſt in our power: It will make us heartily deſire, and readily promote the happineſs of others, as our own; rejoice in their welfare, and ſympathize with them under their wants and calamities: In a word, it will exert itſelf in thoſe ſeveral amiable exerciſes of love beautifully deſcribed by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. xiii. 4—8. Charity ſuffereth long, and is kind, &c.

But I muſt not omit to take ſome notice of the properties of this charity or love, mentioned in this text, under our preſent conſideration.

It is charity out of a pure heart, or, compared with Rom. xii. 9. Love without diſſimulation, ſincere and entire; the ſeveral exerciſes of it proceeding from an inward and prevailing principle of goodneſs in the ſoul.

It is charity out of a good conſcience; exerciſed from a regard to the impartial judgment of our own minds, and dictates of our own hearts, under the juſt awe and reverence of a higher tribunal; and from a concern to approve ourſelves to God who is greater than our hearts; that, our own hearts not condemning us, we may have confidence towards him, 1 John iii. 18—22.

It is charity out of faith unfeigned; animated by a firm and effectual belief of the great truths of Religion and Chriſtianity, which have the moſt direct influence and tendency to promote the principle and exerciſe of love and goodneſs; ſuch a faith as proves its own ſincerity and ſtrength by its working by love.

This is that true Chriſtian charity, or love, which is the end of the commandment, or of the Chriſtian inſtitution: For,

It is expreſly declared that, in Chriſt Jeſus the great thing which is of avail is faith that worketh by love, Gal. x. 6. that charity, exerciſed in a way of mercy and compaſſion to our neighbours, particularly ſuch as are in ſpecial circumſtances of diſtreſs and exigency, and preſerved pure from the contagion of worldly luſts; is expreſly declared to be pure and undefiled religion, James i. 27. and in fine, that love, particularly deſcribed as exerciſed in a way of kindneſs and beneficence to our fellow-creatures, has the preference given to it; not only before the moſt ſhining natural endowments, but alſo the greateſt pretences to religion, and the moſt extraordinary ſupernatural gifts; and even before faith and hope, the other moſt neceſſary graces of the Chriſtian life, as the end is preferred to the means, 1 Cor. xiii.

But nothing, methinks, can in a more clear and ſatisfying manner ſhow, that the end of the Chriſtian inſtitution is love; than the conſideration how evidently every thing in it conſpires to that end.

And here it is proper to conſider, in the Firſt place, the diſcoveries it gives us of the nature and character of God; the ſtandard of all moral perfection. Chriſtianity tends to ſweeten our diſpoſitions, by the moſt amiable view of perfect goodneſs and love reigning above, and animating the whole conduct of the governor of the world: It raiſes us to the love of the perfection of goodneſs, as a real object of our affection; and animates us by the glorious example of God, to aſpire after a reſemblance to him in goodneſs; and to act in concurrence with him, in our place and ſphere, for promoting the deſigns of his goodneſs in the world. It raiſes our minds to the view of the perfection of goodneſs, as reigning in Heaven, and influencing the whole management of things in the univerſe: It ſhews us that nothing in the world is left to be conducted by blind chance, or inferior and imperfect ſkill; but every thing managed according to the purpoſe of him whoſe kingdom ruleth over all, Pſ. cxiii. 19. and who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will, Eph. i. 11. whoſe works in all their variety of forms are all made in wiſdom, and made very good, Pſ. civ. 24. Gen. i. 31.

It gives us the moſt engaging repreſentation of the pure Goodneſs and diſintereſted Benevolence of the Deity. Shews us that, as fury is not in him, Iſa. xxvii. 4. and all thoſe dire and horrid paſſions, that are the ſtain of any rational nature in which they are to be found, are far removed from him: So, he has no narrow and particular intereſt to turn him aſide, or make him ever ſwerve, from the exerciſe of the moſt pure and unbounded goodneſs and kindneſs; being infinitely perfect and happy, independent of his creatures, and ſtanding in need of nothing; ſo that he cannot be profited by our righteouſneſs, neither can our wickedneſs hurt him, Job xxxv. 6, 7, 8.

The Scriptures deſcribes to us his perfect goodneſs, in characters full of condeſcenſion to our capacities and ways of thinking; and therefore moſt ſuited to affect our minds: Of old his name was proclaimed, the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, and tranſgreſſion, and ſin, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. At the ſame time we are told, that he will by no means clear the guilty: His goodneſs is not a partial and ungovern'd fondneſs; but is the extenſive goodneſs of the Univerſal Governor, and is always conducted in the particular exerciſes of it by the moſt conſummate wiſdom, and a prevailing regard to the general good of the world; and therefore the ſanctions with which he has wiſely guarded thoſe laws he has given to his reaſonable creatures for the good of his rational kingdom, are not to be diſpens'd with out of weak and partial fondneſs; and for this reaſon the wicked and impenitent tranſgreſſors of theſe laws muſt not paſs unpuniſhed; nor can his goodneſs and wiſdom ſuffer him to let his creation go to ruin, and laws formed for its good be ſecurely tranſgreſſed, in partial favour to a wretch who is the ſtain of his glorious work. But

I muſt take particular notice of what is moſt peculiar to the Chriſtian inſtitution; as to the manner in which it diſplays to us the character of God, as love and goodneſs, viz. that it gives us ſomething upon this head which goes beyond bare deſcription; and is far more fitted to affect our minds: Namely, as the Goſpel exhibits to our view a glorious Work of God, in which his goodneſs and mercy ſhine forth moſt illuſtriouſly, in an exerciſe of them that particularly concerns us; and in which his other perfections are repreſented to us as joining together for the accompliſhment of the deſigns of the moſt amazing Divine Love and tender mercy: Namely, the work of our redemption by Chriſt Jeſus.

The foundation of Chriſtianity is laid in the moſt glorious and engaging diſplay of the kindneſs and mercy of God our Saviour towards men; while they were ſinners; ſee Rom. v. 8. and thus in circumſtances both wretched and provoking; exceedingly ſtanding in need of mercy from God, but deſerving none at his hands.

When the Redeemer made his entry into the world, the multitude of the Heavenly Hoſt, filled their ſong of praiſe with glory to God in the higheſt, on earth peace, good-will towards men, Luke ii. 14. And this is the ſum of the revelation of the Goſpel; God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life, John iii. 16. And, beloved, ſays the Apoſtle, if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another, 1 John iv. 11.

In the diſcovery of this great myſtery of Divine Love; we behold infinite goodneſs employing infinite wiſdom and Almighty Power in a way of compaſſion to wretched men, and for bringing about their recovery to purity and happineſs: We behold the Father ſending his only begotten Son to ſave us; and giving him to be the propitiation for our ſins, 1 John iv. 10. We behold the Son of God veiling his glory, and appearing in the world in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, Rom. viii. 3. and, being found in faſhion as man, humbling himſelf to death, even the death of the croſs, for our ſalvation and happineſs, Phil. ii. 8. In this glorious work the Divine Love and Goodneſs ſhine forth in its greateſt luſtre and glory: And the other perfections of the Divine Nature are exhibited to us, as acting in concurrence, for promoting the deſigns of the moſt wonderful Love and tender Mercy.

This is that glory of the Lord, which by the Goſpel we are given to behold; and to behold for this end, that by the engaging and transforming view of it we may be changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 18. And, of what engaging force is the juſt view of this glory of God, to reconcile us to God, and raiſe our Souls to the higheſt love of him? Of what force is this great example of love to animate us to an imitation of it? How glorious and engaging is this Divine Example of goodneſs? And how ſhould our particular intereſt in this exerciſe of God's love further oblige us to imitate it?

The promoting of this diſpoſition of love and goodneſs is likewiſe repreſented as the great end of all the inſtitutions of the Chriſtian worſhip. In general; it is repreſented as the deſign of a miniſtry in the Church, to edify the body of Chriſt in love; that ſpeaking the truth in love, we may grow up into him in all things who is the head, even Chriſt, Eph. iv. 12, 15, 16. I ſhall only take particular notice, how conſpicuouſly this is the deſign of thoſe poſitive inſtitutions of the Chriſtian Worſhip, the two ſacraments. The firſt, baptiſm, contains a proper emblem of that change which is brought on the minds of thoſe who become true diſciples of Jeſus; when, as the Apoſtle Peter expreſſes it, they purify their ſouls by obeying the truth through the Spirit, to the unfeigned love of the brethren; 1 Pet. i. 22. and therefore plainly points out to us the obligations we are under to love one another with a pure heart fervently; as being all baptized into one body, 1 Cor. xii. 13. As to the other, the Lord's Supper; the very outward action uſed in it is a proper and natural ſymbol of that mutual love and charity, that common friendſhip, which ſhould be among Chriſtians of all ranks and characters; eating and drinking together at the ſame table, 1 Cor. x. 16, 17. and, the amazing and condeſcending love of the Redeemer, there commemorated, cannot be remembred as it ought; without animating us to the like love, kindneſs and benevolence, towards our neighbours. Again,

One ſpecial advantage of the Chriſtian Inſtitution is, that it ſets before us a perfect example of Divine Virtue, exerciſed in a human character; the example of Jeſus, the author and finiſher of our faith, Heb. xii. 2. Now his character was, that he went about doing good, Acts x. 38. that he loved us, and gave himſelf for us, Eph. v. 2. and almoſt in all places where the example of Chriſt is particularly propoſed to our imitation, it is to recommend to us love and benevolence, or ſome of the ſocial virtues, that are included in it, and ſpring from the prevalency of it.

When our Bleſſed Saviour tells us on what terms we muſt be his diſciples; the firſt thing he inſiſts upon is ſelf-denial: If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, Matt. xvi. 24. i. e. let him renounce thoſe narrow and ſelfiſh principles, that are oppoſite to univerſal love and benevolence; let him mortify and ſubdue his ſelfiſh appetites and paſſions; his deſires of ſenſual pleaſure, of worldly honour and glory, of worldly profit and gain, and even his love of life itſelf; let him bring all theſe under the government of a prevailing principle of goodneſs. This is the firſt leſſon of Jeſus Chriſt. Again,

The character of brotherly-love is what our Bleſſed Saviour pitches upon, as the ſhining and diſtinguiſhing mark by which all men are to know his diſciples, John xiii. 35. Our title to the character of Chriſtians is, by our Bleſſed Saviour, put not upon the clearneſs of our heads, but on the honeſty and ſincerity of our hearts; not upon the exactneſs of our ſpeculative notions in matters of intricacy and nicety, but on the goodneſs of our diſpoſitions; particularly, our being well-affected towards thoſe of our own frame and nature, kindly diſpoſed towards that body of which we are members. Again,

One ſpecial mean by which Chriſtianity excites us to all holy converſation and godlineſs, 2 Pet. iii. 11. is, that it ſets our accountableneſs to God, as the moral governor of the world, in the cleareſt and ſtrongeſt light: It ſets before us the awful ſolemnities of a great day of judgment; when we muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad, 2 Cor. v. 10, 11. and Acts xvii. 30, 31. Now, when that great day ſhall come, what account does our Saviour and our Judge give us of the procedure of it? We may ſee it, Matt. xxv. 31——46.

Let us finally conſider the repreſentation the Goſpel gives us of that life and immortality, which is brought to light by it, 2 Tim. i. 10. of that glorious and happy ſtate in the other world, which it calls us to aſpire after, as the end of our faith and hope: And we ſhall find it repreſents the perfection of love, as a main ingredient in a ſtate of conſummate bliſs, and the foundation of the happineſs of that ſtate: It raiſes our minds to a view of the amiableneſs of goodneſs, and of the joys ariſing from it; by ſome diſtant proſpect of its higheſt exerciſe, and moſt perfect ſtate. According to the hints given us by the Apoſtles Paul (ſee 1 Cor. xiii.) and John (ſee Rev. xxi. 22.) we find that in the other world prophecies ſhall fail, tongues ſhall ceaſe, our preſent knowledge ſhall vaniſh away; even faith and hope ſhall ceaſe, and ſhall be ſwallowed up in ſight and enjoyment; and all thoſe ordinances and means that are calculated for the infirmities of our preſent condition, and appointed for the edifying of the body of Chriſt in love, ſhall all be aboliſhed, when love is perfected; as the ſcaffoldings in a building are pulled down, when it is finiſhed. But charity, or love, never faileth: It enters into the Heavenly State; there it receives its perfection; and, being there made perfect, maintains a perpetual and undiſturbed ſway in the breaſts of all the members of that exalted ſociety. There, the moſt pure and ſuperlative love of God ſhall for ever reign: Love exerciſed, not in effectual wiſhes, but the pureſt joy in the perfect and unalterable happineſs of that Being, whoſe character and government the glorified ſoul ſtands perfectly well affected to; Love exerciſed, not in a way of painful deſires in a ſtate of abſence from the Lord, 2 Cor. v. 6. but fulneſs of joy in his preſence, Pſ. xvi. 11. There ſhall be the moſt pure and perfect intercourſe of love and kindneſs, among all the inhabitants of the Heavenly Manſions: Love and kindneſs exerciſed, not in a way of ſympathy and compaſſion, under wants, weakneſſes and imperfections (which has a mixture of pain, tho' an over-ballancing pleaſure, in it) but the pureſt joy in the perfection and happineſs of one another.

And thus, from the diſcovery the Chriſtian inſtitution gives us of the character of God; from the view it affords us of his love and goodneſs manifeſted in our redemption; from the improvement it calls us to make of this view and diſcovery; from the conſpicuous deſign of the ſeveral inſtitutions of the Chriſtian worſhip; from the example of the Bleſſed Jeſus; from the firſt leſſon he teaches his diſciples; from the mark he aſſigns whereby all men are to know them; from the repreſentation he gives us of the procedure of the great day of judgment; and from the view the Goſpel opens to us of the Heavenly State: From all this, methinks, it is abundantly evident, that the end of the commandment is charity; that the great deſign and purpoſe of Chriſtianity is to form our ſouls into the diſpoſition of love and goodneſs, and to train us up to the perfection of it. And now,

Let us admire the goodneſs of that God we ſerve; and the excellency of that religion we profeſs.

The goodneſs of God is no leſs conſpicuous in the laws and commands he has given to us; than in his other works, and the reſt of his merciful conduct towards us; yea more, than in the ordinary conduct of his providence: He hath magnified his word above all his name, Pſ. cxxxviii. 2. In the ordinary conduct of his providence, he ſhews his care of our bodies, in continually doing them good; but in his laws and inſtitutions he ſhews himſelf the Father of our ſpirits, the kind parent of human ſociety; in giving laws intirely calculated for the perfection and happineſs of our ſouls, and for the peace and welfare of ſociety; which is evident and conſpicuous from this, that the end of his commands is love.

Sure then, none of his inſtitutions can be mere arbitrary injunctions; but are all proper means, known to be ſo by that infinite wiſdom which preſcribes them, for attaining to the beſt and moſt valuable end. The diſpoſition of love and goodneſs; how happy a diſpoſition is it for the ſoul that is poſſeſſed of it! Every exerciſe of love is accompanied with an inward pleaſure and delight; a ſatisfaction and joy, which leaves no ſting behind it; but, on the contrary, improves upon a review, and in the reflection upon the happy temper, and on what we have done in that good bent of mind. How happy is that ſoul in which univerſal love reigns, and bears the ſway over all other affections and paſſions! What would life be, were it an uniform train of the enjoyments which ariſe from the prevalency of it! In this light it is, that a man is ſaid to be ſatisfied from himſelf, Prov. xiv. 14. Withal, this noble diſpoſition diffuſes its benign influences on all around it. It checks, in the very root, thoſe miſchiefs that diſturb and embitter human ſociety; and render men plagues to one another: It is the effectual principle of all thoſe good offices, by which the benefit of others about us, and the proſperity of the publick is promoted. And this happy diſpoſition is that which God chiefly requires and regards; and is the end of all his laws and inſtitutions to us.

Is the end of Chriſtianity univerſal love? How amiable and engaging, then, is the religion of Jeſus! How gloriouſly diſtinguiſhed from thoſe religions that prevail in the dark places of the earth, which are full of the habitations of cruelty, Pſal. lxxiv. 20. where the character of the Deity that is worſhipped, or the nature of the worſhip performed to him, inſpires the worſhipper with rage and fury, and prompts him to act in blood and maſſacre? How evidently and entirely is Chriſtianity calculated for the greateſt happineſs of thoſe who comply with the deſign of it; and for the general benefit of mankind? How conſpicuous would this appear to ocular obſervation; were the deſign of Chriſtianity more univerſally complied with; were its excellent precepts more practiſed, and the temper and conduct of its profeſſors more formed by its pure and peaceable ſpirit and tendency? Then we could hardly doubt of our religion's bringing us to Heaven at laſt, when that love which is the end of it is perfected; while we ſaw how naturally it produced a Heaven wherever it prevailed, and ſo far as its influence took place.

Ver. 6. From which.] Charity, love or commandment.

—— Vain jangling.] i. e. Idle queſtions about tables and curious diſputations concerning genealogies, and other points both needleſs, and not to be attained unto by any other way than by the Goſpel; ſee ver. 4.

Ver. 8. The law.] Of Moſes.

—— Lawfully, according to God's order, appointment and intention.] viz. That ſinful men might thereby be brought to a due ſenſe of their own ſin and ſtate of wrath, and to repent and flee unto the remedy of grace in Chriſt; ſee Rom. iii. 20. and vii. 7. Gal. iii. 24. And that the regenerate man may take it for a rule in all his actions, a curb to his will and a guide to his life; and neither of them to found their righteouſneſs of ſubſiſtence before God upon it, nor the obſervation thereof; becauſe that righteouſneſs is in Chriſt alone.

Ver. 9. — The law is not made for a righteous man.] For they who readily embrace thoſe opportunities, which God hath vouchſafed to grant unto us for our ſalvation, having righteouſneſs and holineſs in themſelves, as an inward and living law, have no need of the terror and conſtraint thereof, and ſo being juſtified in Chriſt, are freed from the condemnation thereof; for a ſovereign's pardon is known to ſtop and put an end to all actions and accuſations grounded upon the law.

—— Lawleſs.] Or, wicked. Here the Apoſtle names the moſt grievous ſins, not intimating that the leſſer ſins are excuſed by the law; but only purpoſing to confront thoſe hypocrites, who were conſtantly crying up the righteouſneſs of the law, and at the ſame time were often guilty of ſome of theſe moſt horrible vices; ſee Rom. ii. 21, 22.

Ver. 10. — Men ſtealers.] Such as ſtole away or concealed other mens ſlaves, ſervants or children, to make them ſlaves; ſee Exod. xxi. 16.

—— Liars.] Or, falſe-witneſſes.

—— Sound doctrine.] Or, the pure and ſaving doctrine of the Goſpel of Chriſt, which Timothy had learnt of Paul; ſee ver. 11.

Ver. 11. According to the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God, which was committed to my truſt.] It is called the glorious Goſpel, or Goſpel of the glory, becauſe it is altogether glorious and Divine, as well in ſplendor or brightneſs of truth, as in power and efficacy of ſpirit, to diſcover and condemn ſin; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 9. and iv. 4. Where Obſerve, that the Apoſtle in this whole argument to ſhew that there was no need to call in the law of Moſes into the conſtitution of the Chriſtian Church, for the condemnation of wicked and diſobedient men, becauſe that the Goſpel did fully ſerve for their conviction and condemnation and reproof, of which he was a truer Apoſtle than the falſe teachers, who oppoſed its diſcipline and obſervance under the pretence of a more perfect way.

Ver. 12. Enabled me.] By his Holy Spirit, to forſake the prejudice of my education, and not only to become a Chriſtian, but a miniſter of his Word and Sacraments: [J. E.] And ſo it follows, for that he counted me faithful putting me into the miniſtry.

Ver. 13. Who was before a blaſphemer.] See Acts viii. 3. and ix. 1.

—— Becauſe I did it ignorantly in unbelief.] i. e. By a falſe zeal without knowledge; ſee Acts iii. 17.

Ver. 14. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love, which is in Chriſt Jeſus.] But though I was then unbelieving and cruel, ſince I am converted to Chriſt, I am now as full of faith and love, which is the end of the commandment, (ſee ver. 5.) and the effect of my communion with Chriſt.

Ver. 15.—Came into the world.] i. e. Took upon him our nature, and became man.

Ver. 16.—In me firſt.] Of thoſe who ſhould believe in Chriſt through my miniſtry. Or, we may interpret it thus, The Lord, before he would ſend me to preach the Goſpel, gave me great experience in the benefits thereof, that I might preach it more zealouſly.

Ver. 17. Now unto the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, and only wiſe God.] I have already proved the eternity, immortality, and infinite wiſdom of God, in diſtinct Diſſertations in the courſe of theſe annotations; and therefore ſhall now only prove his Inviſibility, or Spirituality.

A Diſſertation on the Spirituality of God.

I might begin with that noted text of John iv. 24. where our Saviour Chriſt ſays in expreſs terms, God is a Spirit; but as arguments founded upon reaſon and nature are commonly moſt acceptable to the generality of readers, I ſhall at preſent wave my proofs from Scripture, and begin to prove the Spirituality of God from the very nature of the thing.

If God were not a ſpirit, and wholly immaterial, it would follow, that he ſhould be, not only a merely natural, but a neceſſary agent, and as ſuch, he could not poſſibly be God. For, the notion of a God implies in it the utmoſt freedom of will to move and act, both whenſoever and howſoever he is pleaſed to move and act. But in all kinds of matter, or material beings, it is otherwiſe. All matter, in and of it ſelf, is lifeleſs, and unactive; and though it ſometimes is in motion, and other times at reſt, yet it can have neither reſt nor motion, but from ſome cauſe without it ſelf. Matter is moved, but does not move; that is, it moves not of it ſelf, but owes its motion to ſome external impulſe, cauſing it to move: And though it ſometimes be at reſt, yet, properly, it does not reſt; that is, not of it ſelf, but only by the intervention, or interpoſition of ſome other matter, whoſe bulk and weight hinders and ſtops its farther motion. In ſhort, matter is altogether paſſive; and therefore every body, as all bodies are material, is moved, or is at reſt, according to the impulſe it receives, or the oppoſition and impediment it meets with from ſome other body, or ſome other part of matter: So that, meeting with another body in its way, it loſes, of neceſſity, ſo much of its preſent motion, as by concuſſion is communicated by it to that other body, and perhaps is thereby cauſed to reſt, till it receives again the like involuntary motion from ſome new, unſeen, unfelt, and unknown impulſe from without it ſelf.

If then God were not wholly ſpiritual, if he had any thing of matter in his nature, he muſt, in that reſpect at leaſt, be deemed an involuntary, becauſe, as every material ſubſtance is a neceſſary agent, as owing, ſo far as matter is concerned, all his motion to another: Which is utterly repugnant to the Nature of God, and deſtructive of the very being of religion, For neither is any good to be expected, nor any evil to be feared, from ſuch a neceſſary agent: Which expectation of good and fear of evil, are, if not the main, yet very principal foundations of all religion. And,

If we proceed to enquire after the Spirituality of God, from what we read concerning Spirits, diſperſedly in Scripture, nothing can be plainer.

1. The author to the Hebrews, Heb. i. 14. tells us, of the Angels, which are creatures, as created by God as well as men, That they are all miniſtring ſpirits; and before, ver. 7. in the ſame chapter, That he maketh his angels ſpirits; Pſal. civ. 4.

2. The inſpired Preacher expreſly calls the ſoul of man a ſpirit, when he tell us, Then ſhall the duſt, or body, return to the earth as it was; and the ſpirit, or ſoul, ſhall return to God who gave it, Eccleſ. xii. 7.

3. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the reſurrection, plainly teaches, That the ſouls of men, at leaſt of all good men, ſhall in the future ſtate be living ſpirits, after the ſimilitude of the ſecond Adam. For, ſays he, The firſt man Adam was made a living ſoul; the laſt Adam was made a quickning ſpirit. And as we have born the image of the earthly, or firſt Adam, we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly, or ſecond Adam; ſee 1 Cor. xv. 45. compared with ver. 49.

Now God is the Creator of both men and Angels: And if Angels are ſpirits, and the ſouls of men are ſpirits, as theſe Scriptures make it plain they are, if there were no other reaſon for their being ſuch; then it will follow, That God, as the Creator of them, muſt be a Spirit to. For, ſince a ſpirit is of a much more excellent and noble nature than a body, if God were a body, or corporeal ſubſtance, it were impoſſible for him to produce, that is, to create a ſpirit; becauſe a leſs noble cannot be the author of a more noble nature. Hence, therefore, he is ſtiled by Moſes, more than once. Numb. xvi. 22. and xxvii. 16. The God of the ſpirits of all fleſh; becauſe the Creator of them all: And by the author to the Hebrews, the Father of ſpirits; in oppoſition to the Fathers of our Fleſh; Heb. xii. 9.

But our Saviour, in the place firſt cited, puts this matter out of doubt; for he expreſly tells us there, John iv. 24. God is a Spirit. For though the words are not in the original, God is a Spirit, but only, Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς, God a Spirit; this is no more than what is frequent in the Scriptures, an elliptical expreſſion, or form of ſpeech, wherein there is ſome word wanting, that muſt be ſupplied, to make the ſenſe compleat. And any one may eaſily perceive, that God a Spirit, cannot but ſignify as much, as if it had been ſaid, God is a Spirit; and ſo the ſenſe is plainly this, That the notion of a God infers his Spirituality, as that without which he could not poſſibly be God. In ſhort, our Saviour urges the Spirituality of God, as an argument to prove the neceſſity of worſhipping him in ſpirit and in truth. God is a Spirit, ſays he, and therefore, they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth. And in the verſe before, The true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and in truth: For the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him.

There are indeed, two reaſons offered, ſuch as they are, why this text does not prove God to be a ſpirit.

One is, Becauſe the rule of worſhipping God is not taken from his nature, but from his will; and therefore the nature of God is not to be inferred from the worſhip he requires: For the Apoſtle tells us, That we ought to glorify God in our bodies, as well as in our ſpirits, 1 Cor. vi. 20. From whence we will not grant it may be rationally concluded, that therefore God is a body, as well as a ſpirit: For we contend, that nothing can be God that has a body. And,

The other reaſon, if it may be called a reaſon, is, becauſe, from ſuch an inference as this, God requires ſpiritual worſhip, therefore he is a ſpirit, one of theſe two muſt follow; either that the ancient worſhip of the Jews, which was for the moſt part external and bodily, was not of Divine Inſtitution, as being not agreeable to the Divine Nature; which we muſt own to be a very falſe concluſion: Or, if that worſhip were of Divine Inſtitution, it ought to have been ſpiritually performed; and then there had been no reaſon for the abolition of it. Therefore, ſome have underſtood our Saviour's Words to ſignify no more than this; that ſince God requires men to worſhip him not only with their bodies, but with their ſpirits alſo, or with theſe rather than the other, therefore, the true worſhippers of God will worſhip him in Spirit and in Truth.

But that neither of theſe reaſons is of force ſufficient to evince, that the ſpirituality of God is not to be inferred from thoſe words of our Saviour, will, I think, be evident enough, from this ſingle conſideration: That God requires of all men the moſt perfect worſhip they are capable of performing; but that is the moſt perfect worſhip, which beſt agrees with his Divine Nature. And therefore, ſince it is out of doubt, that ſpiritual worſhip is the moſt perfect worſhip that can be performed by men, and that God requires ſuch a worſhip of them; we may reaſonably hence infer, that ſuch worſhip is moſt ſuitable to the nature of God, and therefore, that he is a ſpirit: And that becauſe he is a ſpirit, therefore he requires all men to worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth. Again,

I aſſert, that God is not only a ſpirit, but that he is, according to the purport of the word inviſible, a moſt pure, and ſimple ſpirit; void of all mixture, or compoſition.

The preciſe nature of a ſpirit requires a much greater knowledge, than any man is maſter of, at leaſt in this imperfect ſtate, to be able to define; becauſe it is a thing that we know very little of at preſent, and it may be, we may never know it perfectly. However, thus much we are ſure of; that what a ſpirit is, that God, the Creator of all ſpirits, muſt be in the utmoſt perfection. So that, if it be the proper definition of a ſpirit, that it is a pure and ſimple eſſence, unmixed, and uncompounded with any thing corporeal; a living, active, but moſt ſubtil ſubſtance; whoſe eſſential property is thinking, and to which it is peculiar to act by thought; and being perfectly immaterial, is therefore neither viſible, nor tangible, neither to be ſeen, nor felt: The ſame conceptions muſt be entertained of God; that he is moſt perfectly a pure, and ſimple immaterial eſſence, without any thing of body, and wholly void of parts; nothing but perfect mind; a ſubſtance inviſible as thought, and more ſubtil than the air; the moſt pure and perfect of all ſpirits in the world.

But now, there are two objections urged from Scripture, againſt the ſpirituality and ſimplicity of God; to which, becauſe they may ſeem to be material, I ſhall at leaſt return them a brief anſwer.

The firſt objection is, That the Scriptures frequently aſcribe to God the members of an human body; and the Sacred Pen-men generally deſcribe him after the ſame manner, as men are deſcribed.

To which I anſwer, That in the Scriptures, the diſcourſes and deſcriptions of God are generally accommodated and adapted to our underſtandings and capacities; ſo that, becauſe we cannot comprehend the actions of a ſpirit, unleſs by ſome ſuch conceptions as we generally have and entertain concerning the operations of human ſouls in human bodies, by the miniſtry of the members of thoſe bodies; therefore, God is ſet forth as acting after ſuch a manner, as if he had and uſed the members of a body. But when we find him ſo deſcribed, the deſcription is not to be underſtood according to the letter, as if he really had and uſed ſuch members; but as ſpoken by the figure Ἀνθρωποπάθεια, frequent in the Scriptures; whereby God is repreſented as having and exerting the affections and actions, and conſequently, with the members of a man. And,

That this figure muſt be underſtood in ſuch deſcriptions of the Deity, is evident, becauſe we no where find him ſo deſcribed, as if he had and uſed the more ignoble members of a body, ſuch as are put to the more ſervile uſes and employments; but only ſuch as are more noble, ſuch as are employed about the moſt excellent and perfect operations: As, to give ſome few inſtances, the heart, which is the principle of all vital acts; the hands, to ſignify his ſtrength and power; the eyes, to intimate his knowledge, becauſe our knowledge, generally ſpeaking, comes by them; the ears, to ſet forth his benignity, becauſe we are eſpecially inclined and ready to lend an ear to them, to whom we are affected; the mouth, as that by which he is ſaid to utter his decrees, becauſe the declarations of the mind of man, and his determinations, as to all affairs of moment that concern him, come that way; and laſtly, the face, to ſignify his favour or averſion towards any perſon, or for any people, as we are uſed to turn our faces towards thoſe we favour, and to turn our faces from thoſe perſons, for whom we have, and care to ſhew, no kindneſs. Theſe, I ſay, which are the more noble and uſeful parts of human bodies, are ſometimes found to be aſcribed to God; not to aſſert that he has any of them really, but only to expreſs the manner of his dealings with mankind more ſuitably to the capacities of human nature; and becauſe we cannot comprehend the actions of the Deity, who is, as has been ſhewn, a moſt pure, moſt ſimple, and moſt perfect ſpirit, much leſs can we comprehend the manner of his actions with us, but by their being in ſuch a way, or by ſuch ſimilitudes, made known and repreſented to us. And ſo much may ſuffice for an anſwer to the firſt objection.

The other is, from what we read concerning man in the account of his creation, which we have from Moſes, that God made man in his own image, and after his likeneſs, Gen. i. 26, 27. From whence the oppugners of God's ſpirituality would infer, that God muſt have an human ſhape, or elſe man is not truly ſaid to be created in his image.

To this objection I ſhall anſwer, that when man is ſaid to be created in the image, and after the likeneſs, or ſimilitude of God, that is not to be underſtood as ſpoken of the external viſible ſhape or form of human bodies; for God expreſly tells the Iſraelites, that they ſaw no ſimilitude, when he ſpake to them in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire, Deut. iv. 15. Whereas, if man were like to God, as to his external bodily ſhape, they had ſeen, and did ſee ſimilitudes of him every day. And the Apoſtle therefore reprehends the Gentiles, for that they changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, Rom. i. 23. But man is ſaid to be created in the image, or likeneſs of God, in reſpect of the internal qualities of his ſoul, which is inviſible, wiſe, or rational, and immortal; and by that, and the qualities with which it is endowed, he is ſaid to repreſent the Deity on earth. Eſpecially he may be ſaid to be God's image, on the account of that dominion, which God inveſted him withal, over all other creatures of this lower world; in which reſpect, as Lord of all the creatures here below, he ſeems to be a kind of viſible Divinity: And yet, ſo far from perfect likeneſs to the Deity in this reſpect, as he is from having that dominion of and from himſelf, when he receives it from another, even from God, who is the fountain of all power. To what, therefore, or to whom, ſhall we liken him, who is inviſible? 1 Tim. i. 17. And,

That God is inviſible, is neceſſarily conſequent upon his being a ſpirit: For, a ſpirit having nothing of corporeal ſubſtance, neither extenſion, nor figure, nor colour, nor any thing proper to a body, to render it viſible, muſt remain inviſible: and conſequently, God, as being a moſt pure, and ſimple ſpirit, muſt likewiſe be inviſible. Accordingly, the Scriptures do expreſly teach, in many places, that God is ſuch a ſpiritual Being, as is not to be ſeen. Thus, when Moſes made it his requeſt, Exod xxxiii. 18. That he might ſee the glory of the Lord, he received this anſwer, at ver. 20. Thou canſt not ſee my face; for there ſhall no man ſee me, and live. Which words ſome have underſtood, as if they ſignified, that whoſoever of mankind ſhould ſee the face of God, however repreſented or diſcovered to him, ſhould inſtantly die. So the Jews generally underſtood them, as appears by two inſtances eſpecially; the firſt is, that of Gideon, who having ſeen and talked with the Angel of the Lord, as ſoon as he diſcovered him to be ſo, he cried out, Alas! O Lord God: For becauſe I have ſeen an Angel of the Lord face to face, Judg. vi. 22. The reaſon of his crying out in ſuch a manner, was, that he feared a preſent death on that account: As appears from what immediately follows, at ver. 23. And the Lord ſaid unto him, Peace be unto thee, fear not, thou ſhalt not die. The other inſtance is, (Judg. xiii,) that of Manoah, the father of Samſon; who having alſo, with his wife, both ſeen and held diſcourſe with an Angel of the Lord, ſo ſoon as he diſcovered him to be ſo, thus beſpeaks his wife, at ver. 22. we ſhall ſurely die, becauſe we have ſeen God. But though this was the opinion of the ancient Jews, and it is plain from theſe two inſtances, that they generally underſtood thoſe words of God to Moſes according to the firſt literal ſenſe or acceptation of them; yet this was their miſtake, For Moſes himſelf did ſee God at that time, though not his face, indeed, that is, not the fulneſs of his glory; and yet remained alive. Therefore, the meaning of them muſt be this; That no living man, or no man in this preſent life, can ſee the face of God. And hence God is expreſly ſaid to be inviſible; 1 Tim. i. 17. that is, by man on this ſide Heaven; whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee, as the Apoſtle tells us, Heb. xi. 27. 1 Tim. vi. 16. In ſhort, if God were viſible, he could not be a ſpirit, at leaſt, he could not be wholly ſpiritual; for no ſpirit, as ſuch, is viſible. And if he were not a moſt pure and ſimple ſpirit, he could not be God. So that, as his Godhead infers his ſpirituality; ſo his ſpirituality as neceſſarily infers his inviſibility. And yet,

We meet with ſeveral inſtances in Scripture, of perſons that are ſaid to have both ſeen, and talked with God: As we read, Gen. xxvi. 2. of Iſaac, That the Lord appeared unto him, and ſaid, Go not down into Egypt: Dwell in the land that I ſhall tell thee of, &c. And Gen. xxxii. 30. of Jacob, That he called the name of the place, where one wreſtled with him, Peniel; becauſe he had ſeen God face to face, and yet his life was preſerved. So likewiſe, Exod. xxiv, 9, 10, 11. of Moſes and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and ſeventy of the elders of Iſrael, That they ſaw the God of Iſrael: And there was under his feet, as it were a paved work of a ſaphire-ſtone, and as it were the body of Heaven in his clearneſs. And upon the nobles of the children of Iſrael he laid not his hand: Alſo they ſaw God, and did eat and drink. So again, 1 Kings xxii. 19. we read concerning the Prophet Micaiah, ſpeaking thus of himſelf; I ſaw the Lord ſitting on his throne, &c. And ſo, laſtly, of Iſaiah, in his Prophecy, vi. 1. That he ſaw the Lord ſitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Theſe, and ſeveral other inſtances of the like nature to be met with in the Sacred Writings, ſome have been inclined to underſtand, as ſo many expreſſions of the viſibility of God. But that none of all theſe paſſages are to be ſo interpreted, will, I think, be ſufficiently manifeſt, from the following conſiderations.

Firſt, That as to ſeveral of them, it is certain, that by God, and the Lord, ſaid to be ſeen and talked with, is to be underſtood no other than ſome Angel, appearing and ſpeaking in the place and name of God. For, as to the third inſtance, which is as expreſs as any to the purpoſe, to wit, that of Moſes and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the ſeventy elders; that it was only an Angel whom they ſaw, and not God in his own perſon, ſeems very plain, from the requeſt of Moſes afterwards, That he might ſee the glory, or the face of God, Exod. xxxiii. 18. For why ſhould he deſire this, if he had ſeen the face of God already? Surely, he there deſires to ſee ſomething that he had not ſeen before; nay, ſomething which, God tells him, no living man, that is, no man in this preſent life, could ſee, And then, 'tis evident, that he, whom they ſaw before, was not God himſelf, but an Angel appearing in his ſtead, and by his order. For an Angel, by God's appointment, might appear, on ſome extraordinary occaſion, clothed with ſo much majeſty and glory, and ſo eminently repreſenting God, that he might, by men, who knew no better, be taken for God himſelf. Or,

Secondly, It might be the Angel, or meſſenger of the covenant, who is the true and proper Son of God, and therefore truly God, who ſo appeared; and ſeeing him, they might be ſaid to have ſeen God: But not in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe. For God, as God, in his naked eſſence, was never, neither could be ever ſeen by man. And yet this does not hinder; but the Son of God, who is truly God of God, as really partaking of the eſſence of the Father, who is the fountain of the Deity, might appear to men, on ſome occaſions, and for wiſe and gracious ends, in ſuch a form, as to be viſible, for ſuch a time, unto them: But then, it was the form, or medium only, which the Deity aſſumed, and not the Deity itſelf, they ſaw.

And laſtly, when the Prophets ſpoken of are ſaid to have ſeen God upon his throne, which cannot ſignify an Angel, but muſt be meant of God himſelf; that is to be underſtood, as only a deſcription of ſome viſion they had of him, either when ſleeping, in a dream; or in an ecſtacy, when waking. In either of which kinds of viſion, the thing itſelf that's repreſented, is not ſeen according to its real nature, but only ſome faint ideas of it are impreſſed upon the mind, or the imagination of the man who is ſo ſaid to ſee it; by which ideas, things are repreſented, not as they really are, but, in condeſcenſion to the capacities of human nature, under ſuch appearances as that is fitted to perceive. And this appears moſt evidently, in that inſtance of Micaiah's viſion, before mentioned; in which he is ſaid to ſee, not only God, but all Iſrael likewiſe, ſcattered upon the hills, as ſheep that have not a ſhepherd: Whereas this is ſpoken of ſomething that had not yet, but was afterwards to happen; for Iſrael was not really ſo ſcattered and diſperſed, till after they received the news of Ahab's being ſlain in battle.

Well, but, ſome may ſay, God is viſible, though not in this life, yet in that which is to come. For ſo our Saviour tells us, Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God, Matt. v. 8. And the Apoſtle has aſſured us, That in the future ſtate, We ſhall ſee him face to face, 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

To which I anſwer, That it is true, theſe things are ſpoken with reſpect to the happineſs of good men in another world; which will mainly conſiſt in the beatifick viſion, at leaſt, that will be a principal ingredient of it. But then we are not ſo to underſtand that viſion, as if it ſhall conſiſt in a clear and perfect view or ſight of the Divine Eſſence: For we cannot ſee the eſſence of any thing in nature; much leſs of him who is the author of nature, and therefore muſt be the moſt pure and ſimple eſſence, and, as ſuch, abſolutely inviſible. And though John has told us, That we ſhall ſee him as he is, 1 Ep. iii. 2. yet this is not ſo to be underſtood, as if we ſhall then ſee the very eſſence of the Deity, for the reaſon before given. For even as to men, and other natural things, though we are ſaid to ſee them as they are; yet we cannot ſee their eſſence, but only ſuch things of them as are properly objects of our ſight, ſuch as, their ſhapes, and colours, and the like, of which the Deity is wholly deſtitute, and therefore cannot poſſibly be ſeen by any eye of man, even in his moſt perfect ſtate of Being. But how then muſt we underſtand the beatifick viſion? How is it that the Juſt ſhall ſee God in the future ſtate? This, I confeſs, is a great difficulty, too great to be reſolved in this imperfect ſtate, where we ſee all things future only as through a glaſs, and only know in part; and therefore what I dare not venture to determine.

Some there are, who think it ſignifies a clear, and intuitive knowledge of the Divine Eſſence, or Nature. But the word ſeeing, ſeems to intimate ſomewhat more; becauſe in that viſion our eternal happineſs is placed, which it cannot be in knowledge, though the moſt perfect that we can by any means acquire, or attain unto. Not that all our happineſs in t'other world will conſiſt only in that bleſſed ſight; but becauſe that beatifick viſion will be the foundation of all our happineſs. For whoever ſhall ſee God, will enjoy him too; and he that ſhall enjoy God, will enjoy, together with, or in him, whatever can be needful to make up, or conſtitute his happineſs, to make it perfect and compleat.

Others, again, there are, who ſeem to be perſuaded, that God ſhall indeed be ſeen by all the Bleſſed in the future ſtate; though not with eyes of fleſh, ſuch as they now have, but with eyes more pure and ſpiritual, ſuited to their bodies, which ſhall then be ſpiritualized, and glorious; to which ſuch virtue ſhall be imparted, whereby they ſhall be able to behold the Deity itſelf, which to all fleſhly eyes is utterly inviſible. But then, if this were ſo, ſomething muſt follow, which will unavoidably run us up to a manifeſt abſurdity at laſt. For, granting this, we muſt of neceſſity agree, that God is truly viſible; and that the reaſon why we do not ſee him in this life, is not becauſe he is inviſible, but becauſe our eyes, at preſent are not duly modify'd for ſuch a Sight. So that according to this notion, God is not abſolutely inviſible, but only ſo to our preſent eyes of fleſh. But in this ſenſe, there are many other things which may be called inviſible, upon the account of their being of too ſubtil a ſubſtance for our eyes, ſuch as they are at preſent, to diſcover, or diſcern. And it may not be amiſs for men of this opinion to conſider, whether it may not lead them, by inſenſible degrees, to think of God, as of a material and corporeal ſubſtance, but only of a more ſubtil texture than all other ſubſtances? And whether ſuch a thought as this would not tend to deprive him of his Deity? For, to think him any thing material, is to think him ſomething leſs than God, and by conſequence, no God at all; ſince no Being that has any kind of matter in its nature, can poſſibly be God.

But others, laſtly, have been of opinion, and I think that their opinion approaches neareſt to the truth: That by the beatifick viſion is to be underſtood, a being familiarly preſent, and perpetually converſant with God in his eternal kingdom of bliſs and glory. And ſo they underſtand our Saviour's words; Take heed that ye deſpiſe not one of theſe little ones; for I ſay unto you, that in Heaven their Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven; Matth. xviii. 10. And in this reſpect the ſaints in glory are compared to ſons in the houſe of their father; on the account of their free poſſeſſion, and uninterrupted enjoyment of all thoſe good things, which ſhall perpetually flow unto them, from the unbounded love and goodneſs of a merciful and gracious God; and by which God will manifeſt his glory to them. So that, to ſee God, ſignifies as much as to enjoy him, and all ſpiritual and eternal good things in and from him. What more it may intend, I ſhall not venture to determine.

Now, therefore, let us ſee what uſe we ought to make of this diſcourſe. If God be a Spirit; if he be a moſt pure and ſimple Spirit; and if, by conſequence, he is inviſible: Then,

Firſt, we learn, from this great truth, the ſin and folly of endeavouring to repreſent the Deity by any kind of likeneſs or ſimilitude, or any image whatſoever. For every image repreſents a body, but no image can be made to repreſent a ſpirit: And therefore God being the moſt pure and ſimple of all ſpirits, no image can be made, or thought of, whereby to repreſent him. For to what can we liken, or what can we fancy to reſemble him, who is inviſible? It is the very argument that God, by Moſes, urges, to diſſuade the Iſraelites from making any kind of image, whereby to worſhip, or ſo much as repreſent him; Deut. iv. 15, &c. Take ye therefore good heed unto your ſelves (for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude on the day that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire) leſt ye corrupt your ſelves, and make you a graven image, the ſimilitude of any figure, the likeneſs of male or female, &c. On this account the Prophet thus beſpeaks the Jews; To whom will ye liken God? or what likeneſs will ye compare unto him? Iſa. xl. 18. To which purpoſe alſo, the Apoſtle, to the idolatrous Athenians; We ought not to think, ſays he, Acts xvii. 29. that the Godhead is like unto gold, or ſilver, or ſtone, graven by art, or man's device. And he expreſly reprehends the Gentiles, generally, for that, they changed the glory of the uncorruptible God, into a image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beaſt, and creeping things; Rom. i. 23.

But beſides the ſin and folly of endeavouring thus to repreſent the Deity, which is wholly ſpiritual, and, by conſequence, inviſible, and ſo not to be reſembled by any likeneſs we can fancy; the danger of all ſuch endeavours is likewiſe very great at leaſt, if not ſometimes unavoidable, able. For how eaſily the making an image of the Deity may lead men to the worſhip of that image, the practice of the Church of Rome has ſufficiently demonſtrated: And, I think, I need not ſtay to ſhew the ſin and danger of that practice; ſince both are evident enough from the Divine Precept to the contrary.

Secondly, Another uſe that may be made of the premiſes is, That ſince God is ſuch a pure and ſimple, as well as ſelf originated and eternal ſpirit, we may, and ought, with confidence and full aſſurance, to depend on him alone, for a ſupply of all ſpiritual gifts and graces, both for this life, and a better; becauſe he has not only promiſed them unto us, and we know that he is faithful, who has promiſed; but we are likewiſe well aſſured, That as they muſt all come from him, as the ſource and fountain of them all, ſo he both can and will abundantly vouchſafe them to us; provided only, that we ſo behave our ſelves towards him, as that he may account us worthy of them. And therefore,

Thirdly, Another, and the laſt uſe I ſhall mention, is the ſame that our Saviour urges, in the place firſt cited; John iv. 24. That ſince God is a Spirit, we therefore ought to worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth. For ſuch as his nature is, pure and ſpiritual; ſuch worſhip, namely, ſpiritual, that is, from the heart, and in ſincerity, he requires of us; and ſuch only he will accept. Not but that he does undoubtedly expect the worſhip of our bodies alſo; but this, without the other, will not ſatisfy. He expects our lips and hearts ſhould go together; and that we glorify him in our bodies, and in our ſpirits, which are his; and ought, therefore, both to be devoted to his ſervice, that at the laſt day, the great day of the Lord, they may be both eternally rewarded by him.

Ver. 18. — Son Timothy.] Why Paul calls Timothy his ſon, is accounted for, in the Introduction.

——— According to the propheſies which went before of thee.] Here the Apoſtle means according to that Divine Inſtinct which I felt, that prompted me to make you a paſtor and biſhop of the Church of Chriſt, having firſt obſerved your ſtedfaſt faith and pious behaviour in the ſame.

Ver. 20. — Whom I have delivered unto Satan.] Or excommunicated; ſee 1 Cor. v. 5.

CHAP. II.

1 That it is meet to pray and give thanks for all men, and the reaſon why. 9 How women ſhould be attired. 12 They are not permitted to teach. 15 They ſhall be ſaved, notwithſtanding the teſtimonies of God's wrath, in childbirth, if they continue in faith.

I Exhort therefore, that firſt of all, ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men:

2 For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty.

3 For this is good and acceptable in the ſight of God our Saviour:

4 Who will have all men to be ſaved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

5 For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus;

6 Who gave himſelf a ranſom for all, to be teſtified in due time.

7 Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apoſtle (I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt, and lye not) a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity.

8 I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting:

9 In like manner alſo, that women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel, with ſhamefacedneſs and ſobriety: not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or coſtly array;

10 But (which becometh women profeſſing godlineſs) with good works.

11 Let the woman learn in ſilence with all ſubjection.

12 But I ſuffer not a woman to teach, nor to uſurp authority over the man, but to be in ſilence.

13 For Adam was firſt formed, then Eve.

14 And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the tranſgreſſion.

15 Notwithſtanding ſhe ſhall be ſaved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity, and holineſs with ſobriety.

In this ſecond chapter the Apoſtle gives Timothy ſome directions to be obſerved by him in publick worſhip, that it might be rightly performed, and particularly,

I. Concerning prayer in publick; where he ſhews, what ſorts of prayer ought to be uſed; the perſons to be prayed for, ver. 1, 2. and the reaſons why we muſt pray for all, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Then he directs concerning the place of prayer, and the diſpoſition of the perſon, who is to pray, ver. 8.

II. Concerning women's behaviour in the publick aſſemblies, both in regard of their dreſs, ver. 9. and to their actions, ver. 11—15.

Ver. 1. I exhort therefore that firſt of all, ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men.] Theſe ſeveral words of the Apoſtle contain the ſeveral acts and offices of thoſe that meet together in the congregation for the publick worſhip of Almighty God. For, then it is we are to offer up unto the throne of grace, ſupplications for the averting or turning away from us ſuch judgments as we feel or fear. Prayers for ſuch bleſſings we ſtand in need of; interceſſions for the bleſſings and mercies of God, upon all the ſons of men; and thankſgivings for the benefits we have received and enjoy. And theſe are our conſtant and daily duties when we meet together in the preſence and houſe of God.

Ver. 2. — And for all that are in authority.] See Rom. xiii. 1.

——— That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty.] Where note, that the Apoſtle in this paſſage gives a reaſon of that duty which he had juſt enjoined to pray for kings, and for all that are in authority: Wherein he ſhews, that the peace of the Goſpel extends even to the outward man. For, though men may expect an inward peace and ſatisfaction of mind, from a ſtrict adherence to the duties of religion; yet they are alſo to expect an increaſe of happineſs by the outward peace, i. e. in living in quiet times, and in being undiſturbed in the practice of that very religion, which is the mutual ſource of ſo much joy; and this can never be compaſſed, unleſs men are protected from thoſe inſolences, violences and injuries, which it is the great end and intent of good government to keep off. And therefore,

From theſe words we both learn the end of government and the ſubjects duty to pray for their governors. And,

As to the end of government; governors are deſcribed in ſome places of Scripture, as judging, or doing juſtice and judgment, 1 Kings x. 9. Jer. xxii. 15. in other places as miniſters of God for our good, as terrors to evil works, as revengers to execute wrath upon them that do evil, Rom. xiii. 3, 4. And conſidering how many intolerable violences the paſſions of men would put them upon, unleſs there were a reſtraint of this kind, that might ſerve both as a curb to the unreaſonable and unjuſt, and as a protection to others againſt them, there could be no ſuch thing as living in ſociety, nor could communities of men ſubſiſt. The beſt laws imaginable, and contrived with the greateſt wiſdom, had been but a very imperfect proviſion for publick peace and tranquility, if in every community there were not thoſe, whoſe particular buſineſs and office it was to give them life, and to ſee that they have their due effect. Therefore, the government of every country is as neceſſary for the welfare of ſociety, as ſociety it ſelf is for that of individuals. And, ſuitably to the excellent nature of it, we find it diſtinguiſhed in Scripture with the name of the ordinance of God; as being a thing not only agreeable to his will, but what he expects all due deference ſhould be paid to, and diſobedience to which he has himſelf remarkably puniſhed, as in the caſe of Corah and his company. God made man for ſociety, and therefore he intended he ſhould live under government. So,

In every government, be the form of it what it will, be the power lodged in one perſon or more, the end of it is ſtill the ſame, the adminiſtration of juſtice, the protection of the innocent, and the puniſhment of evil doers. That this ſhould take place is the intereſt of every man, who lives under it: No man ſhould chuſe, that, either as to his perſon or property, he ſhould be ſubject to violence or oppreſſion. Every one in his turn is glad to reap the benefit of good laws, and would be ſorry not to be under the ſhield of that authority, which is to carry them into execution. It is but natural for every man to deſire to ſit undiſturbed under his own vine, and under his own fig-tree. And from this manifeſt intereſt of all men does the Apoſtle argue, when he exhorts them to pray for governors, namely, that under them they may lead quiet and peaceable lives, in all godlineſs and honeſty; ſignifying thereby that it is

The duty of ſubjects to pray for their governors. And if there were nothing elſe implied in government, than that judgment and juſtice be equally and duly adminiſtred, that were reaſon enough why ſubjects ſhould deſire that their governors ſhould have their Divine Aſſiſtance therein. But when we conſider the large compaſs and extent of the buſineſs of government, and the great variety of things of a publick nature, which are to be ordered by princes, and in the good or ill ordering of which the publick is ſo much concerned, in which their ſubjects cannot but apprehend themſelves to be intereſted, it muſt be owned that the ſtation of princes has great difficulties attending it, and it cannot but be thought highly reaſonable, that perſons, who have ſo great an intereſt in the ſucceſs of the meaſures of thoſe who govern them, as ſubjects have, ſhould be interceſſors to God for them.

Of this the primitive Chriſtians had a due ſenſe, as appears by the accounts, which the earlieſt writers give us of them. They did not ſacrifice to their emperors as gods, becauſe they could conſider them no otherwiſe than as men: But they offered the Chriſtian ſacrifice of prayers and interceſſions in their behalf, and were ſuitors with him, on whom the proſperity of princes and ſtates depends, that he would ſend down his bleſſings on them, when they fought with their enemies in the field; and that their government might be happy and ſucceſsful at home. And this is the duty enjoined here by the Apoſtle.

Ver. 5.—One Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus.] Here let us admire how any Chriſtian can in oppoſition to theſe expreſs words not only invert new and many mediators between God and men, but even lay Chriſt Jeſus aſide, that they may make room for the mediators of their own making, ſuch as they call ſaints in the Church of Rome!

Ver. 9.——Broidered hair.] i. e. Plaited after the manner of thoſe who frequent publick aſſemblies, not to hear the word of God, and to learn the way of ſalvation, but to be ſeen, and if may be, fall a prey to ſome luſtful eye.

Ver. 10.——With good works.] i. e. Such a behaviour in Church, as ſhall convince the by-ſtanders that ſuch a one is not only a hearer, but alſo a doer of the commands of God.

Ver. 11.——In ſilence.] i. e. Peaceably, not pretending to know more than her education has furniſhed her with.

Ver. 12.——Over the man.] i. e. To preſide over him in publick aſſemblies.

Ver. 15.——In child-bearing.] See this expounded in the Introduction.

CHAP. III.

1 How biſhops, and deacons, and their wives ſhould be qualified, 14 and to what end Saint Paul wrote to Timothy of theſe things. 15 Of the Church, and the bleſſed truth therein taught and profeſſed.

THIS is a true ſaying, If a man deſire the office of a biſhop, he deſireth a good work.

2 A biſhop then muſt be blameleſs, the husband of one wife, vigilant, ſober, of good behaviour, given to hoſpitality, apt to teach;

3 Not given to wine, no ſtriker, nor greedy of filthy lucre, but patient, not a brawler, nor coverous;

4 One that ruleth well his own houſe, having his children in ſubjection with all gravity;

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own houſe, how ſhall he take care of the church of God?)

6 Not a novice, leſt being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover, he muſt have a good report of them which are without; leſt he fall into reproach, and the ſnare of the devil.

8 Likewiſe muſt the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre.

9 Holding the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience.

10 And let theſe alſo firſt be proved; then let them uſe the office of a deacon, being found blameleſs.

11 Even ſo muſt their wives be grave, not ſlanderers, ſober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children, and their own houſes well.

13 For they that have uſed the office of a deacon well, purchaſe to themſelves a good degree, and great boldneſs in the faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

14 Theſe things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee ſhortly:

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayſt know how thou oughtſt to behave thy ſelf in the houſe of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

16 And without controverſy, great is the myſtery of godlineſs: God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit, ſeen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

In this chapter the Apoſtle inſtructs Timothy concerning biſhops and deacons, and deſcribes their proper and requiſite qualifications.

I. He begins with the office of a biſhop; he commends the office, ver. 1. and then lays down the qualifications of the perſon to be admitted thereinto, ſhewing what virtues he ought to be endued with, and what vices he ſhould be clear of, ver. 2.—7.

II. He ſhews the qualifications of dercons and of their wives, ver. 8.—13. And,

III. Laſtly, He gives the reaſon of his writing theſe things to Timothy; ver. 14, 15.—Which reaſon he amplified by his adorning the Church with two glorious titles, viz. God's habitation, and the preacher and champion of truth, ver.——15. Which truth, or Goſpel-doctrine is ſingularly commended, and particularly deſcribed in ſome of its chief heads; ver. 16.

Ver. 1.——A biſhop.] Or, Overſeer of the flock of Chriſt, who does as it were watch over them, to prevent their being devoured by wolves, who otherwiſe might come in unawares, or without a lawful call.

Ver. 2.———Of good behaviour.] i. e. Modeſt, and prudent.

Ver. 3. Not given to wine, &c.] Or, not ready to quarrel and offer wrong as one in wine.

———Not greedy of filthy lucre.] Or, to make a diſhoneſt gain or advantage by his office: Not guilty of ſimony.

Ver. 4.———With all gravity.] Or, reſpect and obedience to their parents, and good behaviour to all men, that they may not be like unto the ſons of Eli; ſee 1 Sam. ii.

Ver. 6. Not a novice.] Or, unapproved in the faith; not one who has not given manifeſt tokens of his perſevering faith; ſee ch. i. 18.

Ver. 8. Likewiſe muſt the deacons be, &c.] See the preceding notes.

———Double-tongued.] An unpardonable crime in all ſocieties and among all men; but here particularly mentioned as a caution to deacons, that they ſhould avoid ſuch an unſocial vice; leſt they, who were ordained to ſerve at tables and to relieve the neceſſities of the poor in the Church; ſee Acts vi. ſhould by tittle tattle, hearing what one ſaid or murmured againſt another, ſhould encourage ſuch practices that they might thereby raiſe a bone of contention, and diſturb the quiet and peace of the Church of God. This, in fine, is a caution to all miniſters, never to relate or rehearſe any thing they ſhall judge muſt cauſe contention, and at all times to endeavour to make peace, where they find it is in danger of breaking.

Ver. 9.———The myſtery of the faith.] i. e. The Sacred Doctrine of the Goſpel, which was hidden to fleſh and blood, and which God alone can reveal; Matt. xvi. 17.

————In a pure conſcience.] i. e. Pure or undefiled from any of theſe rehearſed offences.

Ver. 10. Be proved.] See ver. 6.

Ver. 11. Even ſo muſt their wives.] That is, the wives of the biſhops as well as of the deacons.

Ver. 13.—Uſed the office.] Or, miniſtred.

Ver. 16.——Myſtery of godlineſs.] See ver. 9. which teacheth that ——God was manifeſted in the fleſh.] See John i. and the Diſſertation at the end thereof.

——Juſtified.] i. e. Approved of before the judgment-ſeat of God, that he had in his fleſh ſatisfied the Divine Juſtice in the redemption of mankind.

——In the ſpirit.] Or, power of his Godhead; ſee Rom. i. 4. 1 Pet. iii. 18.

———Seen of Angels.] See Matt. xxviii. 2. Mark xvi. 5. Luke xxiv. 4. John xx. 12.

———Preached unto the Gentiles.] See Eph. iii. 5, 6. Col. i. 27.

——Believed on in the world.] See Col. i. 23.

———Received up into glory.] See Luke xxiv. 51. and Acts i. 9.

CHAP. IV.

1 He foretelleth that in the latter times there ſhall be a departure from the faith. 6 And to the end that Timothy might not fail in doing his duty, he furniſheth him with divers precepts belonging thereto.

NOW the Spirit ſpeaketh expreſly, that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils;

2 Speaking lyes in hypocriſy, having their conſcience ſeared with a hot iron;

3 Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abſtain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thankſgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

4 For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refuſed, if it be received with thankſgiving:

5 For it is ſanctified by the word of God, and prayer.

6 If thou put the brethren in remembrance of theſe things, thou ſhalt be a good miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, nouriſhed up in the words of faith, and of good doctrine, whereunto thou haſt attained.

7 But refuſe profane and old wives fables, and exerciſe thy ſelf rather unto godlineſs.

8 For bodily exerciſe profiteth little: but godlineſs is profitable unto all things, having promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

9 This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation.

10 For therefore we both labour, and ſuffer reproach, becauſe we truſt in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, ſpecially of thoſe that believe.

11 Theſe things command and teach.

12 Let no man deſpiſe thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, in purity.

13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by propheſy, with the laying on of the hands of the preſbytery.

15 Meditate upon theſe things, give thy ſelf wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all.

16 Take heed unto thy ſelf, and unto thy doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelf, and them that hear thee.

This chapter contains two general heads, and begins with

I. A Prophetical warning concerning the apoſtacy of the latter times, deſcribing both the author, the time and the matter thereof, ver. 1—5.

II. A direction to Timothy how to behave himſelf in his miniſterial office. As

(1.) To put the brethren in mind of what he had written to him, ver. 6.

(2.) To reject old wives fables. But,

(3.) To exerciſe himſelf in godlineſs, ver. 7.—11.

(4.) To contemplate his youth by his exemplary gravity; ſo that he might cultivate that reſpect and reverence due to his office and character, ver. 12.

(5.) To improve his gifts by reading and preaching, ver. 13, 14. meditation, and induſtry, ver. 15, 16.

Ver. 1.——The ſpirit.] i. e. The Holy Ghoſt the Comforter.

———In the latter times.] The times of the Goſpel-diſpenſation ſo called.

———Seducing ſpirits.] i. e. Falſe teachers, who pretend to be inſpired by the Spirit of God.

——Doctrines of devils.] See Rev. xvi. 14.

Ver. 2. Speaking lyes in hypocriſy.] Or, under a pretence that they are acted by the Spirit of God. Teaching that God is the author of their doctrines; and wreſting the word of God to ſupport their own wicked inventions.

Ver. 3. Forbidding to marry.] As the Papiſts do, to ſome perſons, under the hypocritical pretence of greater holineſs and ſervice to God and his Church; ſee Col. ii. 22, 23.

————And commanding to abſtain from meats.] i. e. From certain kinds of meats, as the Papiſts alſo do, while at the ſame time they will ingorge themſelves with meats of another kind to exceſs, contrary to the expreſs doctrine of the Apoſtle in this place and elſewhere in Rom. xiv. 6. 1 Cor. x. 30. 1 Cor. x. 25. Tit. i. 15.

Ver. 7.——Old wives fables.] See ch. i. 4.

Ver. 12. Let no man deſpiſe thy youth.] i. e. See that thou be not guilty of thoſe things which ſhall prove thee to be too young for that dignity in which I have placed thee: For if thou committeſt childiſh things, men will diſregard thy power and deſpiſe thy youth.

Ver. 14.——By prophecy.] See ch. i. 18. and Acts xiii. 1, 2.

——Preſbytery.] viz. The elders, biſhops and miniſters of the Church.

Ver. 15.——To all.] Or, in all things.

CHAP. V.

1 Rules to be obſerved in reproving. 3 Of widows. 17 Of elders. 23 A precept for Timothy's health. 24 Some mens ſins go before unto judgment, and ſome mens do follow after.

REBUKE not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren;

2 The elder women as mothers, the younger as ſiſters, with all purity.

3 Honour widows that are widows indeed.

4 But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn firſt to ſhew piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God.

5 Now ſhe that is a widow indeed, and deſolate, truſteth in God, and continueth in ſupplications and prayers night and day.

6 But ſhe that liveth in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth.

7 And theſe things give in charge, that they may be blameleſs.

8 But if any provide not for his own, and ſpecially for thoſe of his own houſe, he hath denied the faith, and is worſe than an infidel.

9 Let not a widow be taken into the number, under threeſcore years old, having been the wife of one man.

10 Well reported of for good works; if ſhe have brought up children, if ſhe have lodged ſtrangers, if ſhe have waſhed the ſaints feet, if ſhe have relieved the afflicted, if ſhe have diligently followed every good work.

11 But the younger widows refuſe: for when they have begun to wax wanton againſt Chriſt, they will marry;

12 Having damnation, becauſe they have caſt off their firſt faith.

13 And withal they learn to be idle, wandring about from houſe to houſe; and not only idle, but tattlers alſo, and buſybodies, ſpeaking things which they ought not.

14 I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the houſe, give none occaſion to the adverſary to ſpeak reproachfully.

15 For ſome are already turned aſide after Satan.

16 If any man or woman that believeth, have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

17 Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, eſpecially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

18 For the ſcripture ſaith, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn: and, The labourer is worthy of his reward.

19 Againſt an elder receive not an accuſation, but before two or three witneſſes.

20 Them that ſin, rebuke before all, that others alſo may fear.

21 I charge thee before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the elect angels, that thou obſerve theſe things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

22 Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other mens ſins: keep thy ſelf pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but uſe a little wine for thy ſtomachs ſake, and thine often infirmities.

24 Some mens ſins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and ſome men they follow after.

25 Likewiſe alſo the good works of ſome are manifeſt beforehand; and they that are otherwiſe cannot be hid.

In this chapter the Apoſtle continues to give Timothy more directions; as,

I. Concerning reproof; how it is to be managed both towards elder and younger, ver. 1, 2.

II. Concerning widows, ſhewing how they muſt be relieved, ver. 3, 4. then he deſcribes thoſe who are to be accounted widows, ver. 5.——10. and who not, ver. 11.——13. and 16. And ſo concludes this head with directions for them, ver. 14, 15.

III. Concerning elders; ſhewing that

(1.) They muſt have a liberal maintenance, ver. 17. inforced by the equity of the law of Moſes, and by common juſtice, ver. 18.

(2.) That no accuſation be received againſt them ſlightly, ver. 19.

(3.) How they are to be reproved, ver. 20. amplified by a ſolemn charge againſt partiality herein, ver. 21.

IV. Againſt raſh ordination; diſſwaded by the danger thereof, ver. 22.

V. A direction to Timothy concerning his health, ver. 23.

VI. Further directions and conſiderations about ordination, ver. 24, 25.

Ver. 1. Rebuke not an elder.] See Levit. xix. 32.

Ver. 3.——Widows indeed.] See ver. 5.——16.

Ver. 4. But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn firſt to ſhew piety at home.] Here the Apoſtle declares the duty of rich relations to ſupply the wants of their poor kindred; for the meaning of theſe words is this, if any widow have children or nephews, or kindred, who are able to relieve their wants, let thoſe her kindred eaſe the Church from ſuch a burden, and ſhew kindneſs unto their poor kinſwoman.

Ver. 6 —— She that liveth in pleaſure.] Or, delicately, in plenty, or profuſeneſs.

——— Is dead.] In regard to Chriſt, and the motions of a ſpiritual life.

——— While ſhe liveth.] In her body.

Ver. 8 ——— Own houſe.] Or kindred.

Ver. 9 ——— Taken.] Or choſen.

——— Having been the wife of one man.] That is to ſay, who hath been lawfully divorced from one man before ſhe married another; as we read in Mark x. 12. Or, who having buried her firſt huſband, has lived in a perpetual ſtate of continency and chaſtity ever ſince.

Ver. 11 —— Wax wanton againſt Chriſt.] i. e. Having entered into the ſervice of the Church, and vowed celibacy to Chriſt, they return from their duty, and marry again.

——— Having damnation.] Or deſerve, as they juſtly are, to be condemned by the Church, and reproved for having received the gifts thereof only to procure themſelves another ſtate of life.

Ver. 14 —— To ſpeak reproachfully.] On account of their railing, and other idle tricks. See above at ver. 10—13.

Ver. 16 —— Have widows.] In their families, or among their kindred.

——— Widows indeed.] See ver. 5.

Ver. 18. For the Scripture ſaith.] In Deut. xxv. 4.

——— The labourer, &c.] See Levit. xix. 13. and Deut. xxiv. 14.

Ver. 19 —— But before two or three witneſſes.] According to the law of Moſes in Deut. xix. 15.

Ver. 21. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the elect Angels, that thou obſerve theſe things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.] By this text the reader may obſerve, that he is cautioned againſt prejudice and partiality. A vice, which the Holy Ghoſt thought nothing leſs could guard againſt, than the ſolemn adjuration of the text, pronounced like a dreadful anathema and commination of Divine Vengeance upon the guilty offender! When therefore the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles had conſtituted Timothy Biſhop of Epheſus, and had ordained him as it were the primate and metropolitan of Aſia; having placed ſo large a part of the world under his immediate care and dominion, he ſends him this epiſtle, as the high commiſſion he was empowered to act upon, full of injunctions for his Sacred Office and Authority, and rules for his conduct and behaviour in this his vicegerency under Chriſt: And that he might keep up to the dignity of his character, and diſcharge his high truſt and calling with equal faithfulneſs and integrity; the Apoſtle foreſeeing what difficulties he might encounter in his duty, and how obnoxious they might render him to all the infirmities and inclinations of human nature, that he might be neither over-ruled by paſſion, biaſſed by intereſt, or perverted by prejudice, charges and conjures him by all that is holy, that as he ſhould anſwer it at the great judgment of the laſt day, in that tremendous court of Judicature, where the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be revealed, that as he revered the ſentence of God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the preſence of the elect Angels, He would obſerve theſe things, without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

And therefore, in order to ſtate the true nature and bounds of theſe two vices, prohibited in the text, and to ſhew wherein they conſiſt, we may obſerve, that this expreſſion, Χωρὶς προκρίματος, ſeems to be rendered with too much latitude in our tranſlation, by preferring one before another, which confounds it with partiality that follows; but as the original ſignifies, and the vulgar Latin tranſlates it, denotes prejudice, which is a thing as much ſeparate and diſtinct from partiality, as the cauſe is from the effect, and is indeed the neceſſary fountain from whence it is derived. For, a man may be prejudiced, or have his mind prepoſſeſſed with vicious inclinations, and yet in ſome reſpects, and in ſome caſes, not act partially, and according to their tendency. As an Atheiſt may do an act of charity, or as the wicked judge in the Goſpel, that feared neither God nor man, avenge oppreſſion, and give a juſt ſentence on iniquity. Though it muſt be confeſſed, that it is very ſeldom, and indeed the work of chance, and contrary to the regular courſe of nature, when mens actions are not correſpondent principles. But, on the other hand, whoever is guilty of an undeſerved, unwarrantable, and injurious act of favour or rigor, muſt be preſumed to have his mind ſwayed by a falſe preconception, and to be governed by the wrong propenſities of a depraved will, a diſtorted judgment, and a malicious inclination.

Hence the true nature of prejudice may ſeem to conſiſt in this, that it is a premature, indeliberate, and irrational opinion, haſtily fixed in the mind, either for, or againſt any perſon or thing, not ariſing from any light or conviction of the underſtanding, or the merit or evidence of the cauſe, but from the predominant controul of the will, and the arbitrary impulſe of humour, or imagination, averſion, or deſire. And it may be called a kind of moral ſympathy, or antipathy, or a fantaſtical liking, or hating any thing, not ſo much from reaſon as caprice. Now, though it is unnatural for the mind to hang and fluctuate in an equidency, in relation to any thing propoſed to the thoughts, and that it muſt determine its judgment one way or other; yet this ought always to be regulated by the clear demonſtration of ſenſe and argument, where the ſubject will admit of it, and by the moſt probable proofs where it will not.

When the underſtanding certainly perceives the truth of things, it enjoys an infallible knowledge, and leaves no room for doubt or prejudice. But the compaſs of this is ſo narrow and confined, that it ſerves only to upbraid our ignorance, and to mortify our pride and ambition in this dubious and gloomy ſtate here below. A conſideration one would think ſufficient in itſelf to make mankind cautious in entertaining opinions, and ſollicitous in eſtabliſhing their truth, to keep their minds ſingle, free, and untainted, ready to receive conviction, and not ſo pertinacious as to refuſe all further information, and, Like the deaf adder, to ſtop their ears to the voice of the charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely.

If men judge before they have throughly examined the force of thoſe arguments, that ſhould determine their laſt thoughts, it muſt be owing to fortune, that they ſtumble upon truth, and find by accident what they grope after in the dark. They ſhoot at random, and it is a miracle if they hit the mark, at which they never took aim.

This is the prime ſource of error in the world, men in defence of their own opinions; declare war againſt all oppoſers: When they have once pronounced their ſentiments, they are reſolved to maintain them, and delude themſelves into the belief of their own judgments, for no other reaſon, but becauſe they never thought otherwiſe. Which indeed is to preſume that they judged right, becauſe they never judged as they ought. For then are we only properly ſaid to judge, when we have traverſed over the whole extent of our ſubject, and have nicely compared the different habitudes it bears with reſpect to itſelf, and other beings, when we have weighed every doubt and difficulty in the ballance of reaſon, when the mind has gradually run through, and unravelled the intricate chain of thoughts, and conſequences belonging to it, till at laſt upon a compleat ſurvey, it collects, diſtinguiſhes, and adheres to the truth it muſt reſt upon, and confide in. So that when a man has with all due care, integrity, and circumſpection fairly diſcuſſed his opinion, and the teſtimony on all ſides has been calmly and impartially debated, he may with a moral aſſurance, give in the verdict of his own judgment, which he is obliged to ſtand to, and defend, both in juſtice and honour, till better evidence appears, and convinces him to be in a miſtake. But to aſſert his notions right or wrong, to ſhut his eyes againſt the light, contumaciouſly to withſtand all perſwaſion, and to bid defiance to reaſon, is to be wilfully and obſtinately prejudiced.

In a word, as he who acts with this ingenuous fidelity, may rationally and laudably aſſent to thoſe propoſitions, againſt which he at preſent ſees no ſufficient objection: So he who is poſſeſſed with that obdurate ſelf-ſufficiency, as to imagine his own maxims inconteſtable, and above the reach of all contradiction, muſt neceſſarily be deluded into falſhood and error, and involved in that prejudice condemned in the text.

Thus far prejudice has been confined only to matters of ſpeculation, and is to be conſidered as a kind of intellectual ſin, and as an error in judgment; but when it comes to break out, and exemplify it ſelf in action, then it commences partiality, which is an error in conſcience, and a viſible and practical inſtance of it.

Ver. 22. Lay hands ſuddenly on no man.] Expoſitors are much divided as to the interpretation of theſe words; for, ſome contend that they denote the ancient and primitive ceremony, the abſolution of penitents; and then they will mean, do not declare any perſon a true penitent, and worthy to be re-admitted into the boſom of the faithful and to the holy communion, before he has given notable proof of his ſincere repentance, for if thou admitteſt all perſons promiſcuouſly to that holy table, before they be truly converted from the evil of their ways, thou thyſelf will be accountable for the ſcandal which their evil deeds muſt bring upon the Church of God, becauſe it comes through thy permiſſion. Again, others confine the words to the act of ordination, as if the Apoſtle did here exhort Timothy to admit no man into holy orders, who was not well reported of for good works, ver. 10. and endued with thoſe good qualities ſpoken of before in ch. iii. 2, &c. becauſe ſuch a precipitate ordination muſt involve him in all the evil conſequences thereof, and make him partaker of other mens ſins. But,

Let theſe opinions be defended by their own authors, it will be more to our purpoſe to conſider the text in an unreſtrained ſenſe. And ſo I ſay,

Theſe words are an excellent maxim for the conduct of human life in general, or it is an univerſal prohibition of contributing towards, concurring or complying with, the wicked practices of others, leſt as we thereby become accomplices in their iniquity, we may be alſo ſharers in their guilt, and fellow-ſufferers in their puniſhment.

It will therefore neceſſarily be enquired how many ways we may be partakers of other mens ſins? To which I anſwer, ſix ways, viz. by

1. Commanding, or commiſſioning their execution.
2. Conniving at, conſenting to, or concealing them.
3. Adminiſtring counſel, direction, or aſſiſtance towards them.
4. Commending, approving, excuſing, or defending them.
5. Giving offence, or ſcandalous example.
6. Authorizing, propagating, or publiſhing any hereſy, falſe doctrine, ſchiſm, faction, irreligion, or immorality.

For,

I. We may partake of other mens ſins, by commanding, or commiſſioning their execution. This particularly reſpects all ſuch as are inveſted with any juriſdiction, or authority over their inferiors, all princes and magiſtrates, civil and eccleſiaſtical, maſters and governors, parents and guardians, or any others that enjoy a right of dominion or diſcipline, granted and eſtabliſhed by the law, and a pre-eminence requiring all allegiance and ſubjection to them in all things juſt and honeſt. Now, though this ſovereignty is reſtrained within the rules of juſtice and equity, of reaſon and religion, and no power upon earth can authorize, juſtify or excuſe the violation of them, there lying a ſuperior, indefeaſible obligation that exempts all men from an illegal or uſurped obedience; yet the controuling ſway, and over-bearing awe of force and authority, the affrighting and almoſt irreſiſtible terrors of threats and puniſhments, the dazling glory of wealth and grandeur, together with the perſwaſive influence of intereſt and ambition, make great allowances for fleſh and blood, not eaſily capable in itſelf, without the merciful aſſiſtance of Divine Grace, to ſtruggle with, and vanquiſh ſuch preſſing difficulties and temptations; and therefore charge back a double portion of guilt upon thoſe perſons who abuſe their dominion to baſe and ſinful purpoſes, who in this caſe are to be conſidered as the principal authors of theſe evils, as the prime cauſe and original ground-ſpring from whence they flow. Not that this reflection of a greater degree of guilt upon the commander, can wholly acquit the ſubordinate tranſactor of his, who knows he is reſponſible to a much greater Maſter and Sovereign. He muſt ſhare his proportion, and bear his own burden, tho' of much leſſer weight than that of his ſuperior. Upon which reaſon are founded thoſe ſeveral maxims of the civil law, that exempt all thoſe that act under a command from the guilt of the offence. And on the ſame account we find in the Scriptures many inſtances of very flagrant ſins, committed by ſome miniſters of ſtate, aſcribed only to the Supreme Power, under whoſe commiſſion they acted. A very convincing example whereof we read in the diſmal caſe of Uriah, whoſe execrable murther, though tranſacted by Joab through David's order, was not only charged upon the king himſelf, in his own words in his penitential Pſalm compoſed on that lamentable occaſion, but by the Holy Ghoſt alſo in the 2d of Samuel xii. 9. Thou haſt killed Uriah the Hittite with the ſword, and haſt ſlain him with the ſword of the children of Ammon. Though doubtleſs his ſubjects were guilty of a very heinous ſin, in obeying their ſovereign's impious command; yet did God viſit that abominable and ungrateful fact upon the prince's head, in a puniſhment that wore the colour of his crime, and branded his otherwiſe ſpotleſs character with a bloody mark to all poſterity. And ſo was the parallel murther of Naboth both aſcribed to, and expiated in the perſons of Ahab and Jezabel, who remain upon record as frightful and infamous examples of abuſed power, avarice and uſurpation. Where princes thus preſume to force the conſciences of their ſubjects, and break in upon their rights and laws, not only their private and perſonal, but the publick and national crimes will be required at their hands; and for this reaſon the idolatry of the Jews is charged upon Jeroboam, for which the Spirit of God has ſtigmatized his pedigree to eternity, in that odious and reproachful character of being the ſon of Nebat that made Iſrael to ſin, when Aaron had ſo far ſubmitted to the impious requeſt of the people as to dethrone their God and Sovereign, and change their glory into the ſimilitude of a calf that eateth hay, we find Moſes accuſing the high-prieſt of their rebellion and idolatry, in this ſharp expoſtulation, What did this people unto thee, that thou haſt brought ſo great a ſin upon them? Exod. xxxii. 31. The ſame reaſon will be found to hold good in all caſes of government and authority, which in the very loweſt degree are offices of commiſſion and truſt, lodged as the delegacy, and vicegerency of God, the fountain of all power, in the hands of magiſtrates and ſuperiors, who ſtand accountable to him for the crimes of their inferiors, in which they are partakers, and conſequently will bear the load of a double damnation, when the ſouls that are loſt through their miſconduct are required at their hands. Again,

II. We may be partakers of other mens ſins, by conniving at, conſenting to, or concealing them. Now the guilt in this particular riſes in proportion to the power, and obligation, that differently binds, or engages men, according to the variety of their circumſtances and ſtations, to prevent vice and injuſtice. By that rule is to be meaſured the bulk, and extent of the ſin; for where a man has no power, juriſdiction, or obligation to exert that power, there can be no communication of the action: But where we are inveſted in ſuch authority, as in the caſe of all publick offices and adminiſtrations, or where the precepts of humanity, civil juſtice or religion require us to interpoſe, and reſtrain the commiſſion of any vicious act, either through careleſsneſs, and negligence, partiality, or impunity in the one, connivance, conſent, or concealment in the other, they both become partakers of the crimes committed, in an unfaithful diſcharge of their duties, and a tacit violation of their truſt, and are not only reſponſible for the preſent acts alone, but alſo for all the miſchievous conſequences attending them.

A tacit admiſſion in any one that has the right of prohibition, amounts to an approbation of any thing in the ſenſe of the whole world, and involves the perſon, ſo conſenting under a double guilt, both as being a party concerned in the ſin, and as a traitor of his authority. Silence where a man ought to ſpeak, is as culpable, if not more than an actual, and open engagement. Theſe things haſt thou done, and I held my tongue, and thou thoughtſt that I was even ſuch an one as thyſelf, ſays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. l. 21. and the natural inference moſt men are apt to draw from the cowardly compliance, and baſe obſequiouſneſs of ſuch as ought to ſhew their power, and principles to the contrary. He that does not appear in oppoſition to that which it is his duty to prevent, or ſuppreſs, muſt at the leaſt juſtly be concluded not to be againſt it, according to that aphoriſm of our Bleſſed Saviour, He that is not againſt us, is on our part, Mark ix. 40. which indeed may bear a further interpretation, that the man that acts not evidently againſt any party or deſign, is a real promoter, or encourager of its intereſt. For certainly any perſon in authority does much more contribute to the advancement of evil by a permiſſive ſilence, and paſſive forbearance, than an inferior can in the moſt vigorous expreſſion of his zeal and fervency for it; becauſe by him vice ſeems to be legitimated, as it were eſtabliſhed by a law, and to have its current paſtport without controul in the world. Thus does he that acquieſces in, ſubmits to, or winks at a crime that by his poſt and power he is qualified to forbid, prevent, redreſs, or correct, become poſitively guilty of that very crime himſelf, as much as if he had been the ſingle and perſonal aggreſſor. Both the Old and New Teſtament abounding with pregnant examples for the proof of this aſſertion, but I ſhall mention only two drawn out of each, which ſpeak very home to the purpoſe.

The firſt is that remarkable and notorious caſe of old Eli, under the joint conſideration both of a parent and magiſtrate. He, like a too indulgent father, and governor, connived at the abominable tranſgreſſions of the prieſts his ſons, who, by turning the very temple into a brothel-houſe, had made the ſacrifice of the Lord to ſtink, and his ſervice deteſtable in the ſight of the people, and when he ought to have purged the Church of ſuch ſanctified villany, and executed the ſevereſt puniſhments that juſtice could inflict upon ſuch helliſh crimes, and as it were to have reconciled God to his altar, by the effuſion of his own guilty blood upon it, he could not find in his heart to give them ſo much as a rebuke, till the clamours and outcries of the people forced him to that ungrateful office. And even then too his corrections were ſo ſoft and gentle, ſo full of ſilly fondneſs, and dotage, that they rather encouraged, than reſtrained their odious impieties. Therefore, we find God charging all theſe monſtrous ſins upon the old prophet, with the higheſt exprobation of the blackeſt ingratitude and injuſtice, ſpurning the uſeleſs and unworthy dotard out of his office, and executing vengeance upon him and his whole poſterity with the utmoſt indignation and diſdain.

The other inſtance we have recorded by Paul, in his firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, ch. v. wherein he very ſharply charges his new converts as partakers in the foul ſin of the inceſtuous perſon, becauſe they connived at it, and did not poſitively proceed to execute the Church-cenſures upon him, in totally cutting off ſuch a corrupt and rotten member from its body. Ye are puffed up, ſays he, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you. For the underſtanding whereof, we muſt obſerve that in the primitive ages of Chriſtianity, excommunication denoted by theſe expreſſions, ἐξαίρησις ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν, and παραδοῦναι τῷ Σατανᾷ, being never uſed but on very great and enormous occaſions, and being juſtly eſteemed of ſuch a dreadful and damnable conſequence, was always attended with the ſad pomp and mournful ſolemnities of a funeral; the congregation were arrayed in black, accompanying the execution with lamentation and loud weeping, as over the ſpiritual death of the criminal's ſoul. So that the Apoſtle here expoſtulates with the Corinthians, as encouraging and ſharing in the vice, in omitting to puniſhing it, though in ſuch a ſevere and deſperate way, wherein mercy and compaſſion might be allowed to take place, if in any caſe in the world.

Thus the toleration of any ſin in others by perſons of power and authority, tranſlates it back on their own heads, and renders them actually guilty of it. This aſſertion muſt be allowed evident and undeniable in all inſtances of government; but then there ariſes a freſh queſtion, How far we may be partakers of other mens ſins in the private intercourſe and affairs of human life betwixt man and man in common converſation? We are certainly obliged in charity to bear always an hearty and tender concern for our neighbour's good and ſafety, to conſider one another, to look not every man on his own things, but every man alſo to the things of others; to edify one another, to adviſe, warn, rebuke, Heb. x. 24. Phil. ii. 4. Rom. xiv. 19, &c. and by all other methods to promote his welfare as occaſion ſerves, or we have opportunity of maintaining and propagating the great intereſt of truth, piety and virtue in the world. But, on the other hand, do not the ſame expreſs injunctions of charity, religion and juſtice oblige us with equal force and penalty to the no leſs neceſſary duties of peace and quietneſs, forbearance and forgiveneſs, in mercy, compaſſion and good-nature to cover and conceal our brother's ſins and infirmities? Do not theſe as ſtrictly command us not to thruſt our ſelves pragmatically into his buſineſs, or meddle with thoſe concerns that do not belong to us, or under the ſanctified pretence of reformation of manners, to turn informers, aſſume an odious and factious office, arrogantly intrench upon others Chriſtian Liberty and innocence, and under the ſhew of more zeal and purity, (the moſt infallible token of a dextrous and refined hypocrite and knave) turn the world upſide down, and ſet all mankind into quarrels and confuſions? Now, to reconcile theſe differences, and to ſteer our courſe even between the limits of duty and error, which indeed is not ſo eaſy a matter preciſely in all inſtances to do, theſe three concluſions may help to ſolve moſt of the difficulties in the caſe before us.

1. Firſt, We may be partakers of other mens ſins, if we do not endeavour to the utmoſt of our power to prevent or ſtop their commiſſion, when they openly break in upon religion, or aſſault the glory of God. In this caſe we lie under a double obligation to interpoſe, in vindication of the Divine Honour, and for the eternal ſalvation of our brother; both which ought to be more dear to us than any other conſiderations in the world. When we hear God's holy and dreadful Name blaſphemed, his Being denied, his Providence arraigned, his goodneſs cenſured, his power contemned, juſtice queſtioned, his mercy mocked, or the Sacred Myſteries of our faith vilified or ridiculed, not to ſtand up in their defence, and with all the courage, authority, and argument we are maſters of to aſſert the glorious cauſe of God and truth, is to renounce our allegiance to one, and pretenſions to the other. In ſuch baſe and cowardly diſloyalty to God, ſilence and connivance make us actual aggreſſors; not to ſpeak, is to approve; not to act, is to commit; not to rebuke, is to conſent to; not to ſhew our diſpleaſure againſt, is to have complacency in it; not to reſent, is to ſubmit to it; not to endeavour to deſtroy, is to promote the kingdom of the Devil, and to ſide with the powers of darkneſs. This is a negative denial of God, (if I may ſo ſpeak) and communicates a deep ſhare of the guilt; but how much greater then does a poſitive derive? When men, out of a time-ſerving fear, ſcycophantizing flattery, or miſtaken complaiſance, ſhall fall in with the damnable humours, or debauched opinions of lewd ſots and Atheiſts, ſmile at their ſmutty and profane jeſts, tamely hear thoſe holy oracles, by which we expect to be ſaved, ſcoffed at and derided, and impudently criticiſed upon, and give an approving laugh to that excellent drollery, for which the ſpeaker's tongue ought to be cut out, leſt they ſhould diſpleaſe a crew of ignorant and profligate infidels, by ſhewing unſeaſonably before brutes and buffoons, that they themſelves are men, that is, creatures, endued with reaſon and reflection, that are not aſhamed of the God that made them, and have ſo much gratitude as to own and vindicate the Saviour that redeemed them. Not to rebuke ſuch daring impieties, (which fly in the face of Heaven, and call aloud for ſpeedy vengeance, for thunder and earthquakes to blaſt and ſwallow ſuch accurſed miſcreants, who thus provoke, and as it were anticipate their damnation) notwithſtanding the moſt powerful and dangerous oppoſitions in the world, is, in the Apoſtle's language, Eph. v. 11. to have fellowſhip with the works of darkneſs, to aſſociate with Devils incarnate, and to enter into a covenant with Death, and agreement with Hell, as the Prophet elegantly ſpeaks, Iſa. xxviii. 18. which ſuch treacherous apoſtates to their religion will at laſt, to their eternal ſorrow, find their juſt reward hereafter.

2. Secondly, We may be partakers of other mens ſins, if we do not to the utmoſt of our power endeavour to prevent, or obſtruct their commiſſion, when they manifeſtly endanger the good of the publick. For, he that is either privy to, induſtriouſly conceals, or any ways abets, ſchiſmatical, illegal, or rebellious enterpriſes, both in the eyes of human, as well as divine laws, is an accomplice, and partaker in the guilt, a traytor to God and his prince, a patron and protector of injuſtice, and a common adverſary to himſelf, as well as all mankind.

3. We may partake in other mens ſins, by conniving at, or conſenting to, any imminent danger, or great injury, that may violently affect the body or ſoul, the life or eſtate ſpiritual or temporal, of our neighbour. Where theſe viſibly lie at ſtake, they demand our ſuccours, and common humanity intereſts us in their defence; where his innocent reputation is ſcandalouſly aſperſed, his naked perſon openly aſſaulted or aſſaſſinated, his fortune ſecretly ſtruck at or undermined, every man is bound to follow the example of that heroic champion and deliverer of his countrymen, Moſes, who, though endowed with ſuch an unparallel'd meekneſs, as nothing but ſuch an heinous provocation could diſturb, Seeing one of his brethren ſuffering wrong, defended him, and avenged him that was oppreſſed, and ſmote the Egyptian, Acts vii. 24. Otherwiſe we lie obnoxious to the imputation of the Pſalmiſt, When thou ſaweſt a thief, thou conſentedſt unto him, and haſt been partaker with the adulterers, Pſal. l. 18. He muſt at leaſt be ſuppoſed a well-wiſher to the villany, that can behold its commiſſion without compaſſion and reſentment. Paul's mere ſtanding by, and holding the garments of Stephen's executioners, was enough to have attainted the Apoſtle, and rendered him guilty of the martyr's blood. Now, if barely viewing the perpetration of a corporal crime in others, when we can obſtruct it, may make us malefactors ourſelves, certainly the permiſſion of a ſpiritual much more, as it is of a more dreadful conſequence to the better part of man. To prevent which, we are obliged to interpoſe with the moſt fraternal concern, gentle admonition, tender reproof, kind advice, and inſinuating perſuaſions, ſtill with a cautious and due conſideration of time, of place, and of perſon. But if theſe friendly overtures cannot prevail, we have waſhed our hands of the guilt, and ſtand acquitted before God and our conſcience; but without them, we are poſitively ſaid, even in the Moſaic law, Lev. xix. 17. to ſuffer ſin upon him, and conſequently liable to partake of the penalty. But however,

We muſt ſtrictly obſerve, that theſe duties are always confined to overt-acts and viſible caſes; for, religion has left in this matter a wide room for the right exerciſe of our prudence and diſcretion; for it does not oblige to charge men at random, upon bare ſurmiſe or ſuſpicion, or to pry officiouſly into their lives and ſecret affairs, and to invade their private rights, by uſurping a juriſdiction which we have no title to juſtify, or with a rude air of ſuperiority to obtrude ourſelves upon them as privy-counſellors, and dogmatically cenſure, rebuke and adviſe in our neighbour's proceedings, that do not belong to us, neither lie under the verge of our cognizance. Whatever godly and fallacious gloſſes ſuch troubleſome waſps, that erect into illegal inquiſitions, may caſt upon their actions, they are doubtleſs the unwarrantable effects of an idle, incroaching, impertinent, and medling curioſity, a vice as contrary to the true, generous ſpirit of Chriſtianity, as it is to good manners and juſtice. It is, in ſhort, the baſe product of ill nature, ſpiritual pride, cenſoriouſneſs, and ſanctified ſpleen, pretending to carry on the bleſſed work of reformation by lying, ſlandering, whiſpering, backbiting, and tale-bearing, the moſt expreſs character of the Devil, who is emphatically ſtiled the grand accuſer of the brethren. No wonder, therefore, that Paul has ſo ſeverely ſtigmatized theſe buſy-bodies in other mens matters, theſe Αλλοτριοεπίσκοποι, that preſume to exerciſe the office and diſcipline of a Biſhop in other mens provinces, (as the original may be rendered) whom he juſtly ranks with murderers, thieves, and malefactors, 1 Pet. iv. 15. as the moſt proper perſons to keep one another company.

III. We may partake in other mens ſins, by adminiſtring counſel, direction, or aſſiſtance towards them. It is almoſt impoſſible that any great act of villany ſhould be carried on and accompliſhed by any one ſingle perſon; there muſt be co-operators, partners, and under-workers in it, who, like the ſeveral actors in a well-formed tragedy, muſt contribute their various parts to the main body of the action, and all conſpire and unite in the fatal cataſtrophe.

Abſalom muſt have his Achitophel, Job his boſom-ſerpent, his wife, Judas his Sanhedrim; that under the ſacred and endearing pretence of friendſhip, for the gratification of their ambition, pleaſure, or avarice, muſt perſwade the one to rebel, entice the other to renounce his God, and bribe the third to betray his very Saviour. Now, certainly theſe agents and ſollicitors in the Devil's cauſe, who adviſe, direct, or promote it, are to be conſidered not only as the allies, but as principal ſharers in the ſin, whether they bring about their deſigns by ſkilfully applying to the humours, affections, or intereſts of the perſon betrayed, or by importunity, and the winning charms of addreſs, enforced by proper arguments, objects, and occaſions to catch, and enſnare an unguarded heart. Nay, further,

He that thus inveigles any perſon, and ſeduces him againſt the reluctance of his conſcience, by menaces, or ſollicitations, muſt be concluded under a deeper imputation of guilt, than the very actor himſelf, as thoſe words of our Saviour ſeem poſitively to infer, as it were a little in excuſe of that corrupt, and ſelf-condemned judge, Pontius Pilate, overborn by the clamours and outrage of the tumultuous Jews, into the moſt villainous, moſt execrable ſentence, upon the juſteſt and innocenteſt perſon in the world, even againſt all convictions of the moſt undeniable truth, and reaſon. He that delivered me unto thee, hath the greater ſin, John xix. 11. which does aſſert the traytor more a ſon of perdition, than the falſe condemner himſelf. So highly are we obliged in the words of Jacob to beſeech God to keep us free from any communion with theſe inſtruments of cruelty, O my ſoul, come not thou into their ſecret, unto their aſſembly, mine honour be not thou united. Now if bare counſel, or aſſiſtance, can entitle us to any ſin before its commiſſion, certainly.

IV. We may alſo become partakers of it, in commending, approving, excuſing, or defending it afterward. In this caſe a man contracts the guilt of a prior action, he ſins by precedent, and derives another's tranſgreſſion upon himſelf by his aſſent to it. Theſe are the patrons, and advocates of Satan's court, who though they dare not appear perſonally in the crime, yet are his faithful friends in the juſtification of it. We may frequently obſerve many of the crafty, time-ſerving politicians of this world, to act always in publick on the reſerve, and never to declare their opinions, and principles, to keep mankind in ſuſpenſe, and hold their adverſaries at a parry; but never fail to fall in with the party, and cloſe with the victorious ſide, when their intereſt lies ſure, and open. They are content till that, to act behind the curtain, ſee others expoſed to difficulties and dangers, and draw the tools in with flattering panegyrics, that they may reap the fruit of their labours. Such men are as much in their thoughts, and imaginations engaged in the ſin, however they may fancy themſelves ſecure, and innocent, in this miſerable ſalvo, of not being actual, and direct aggreſſors in it. Though it muſt be confeſſed to be impoſſible for any one to do as much with his heart and inclinations, as he can with his hand and purſe, yet conſidering the cauſe which may reſtrain him, which perhaps is only cowardice, fear of ſucceſs, or want of opportunity, he may become partaker of the guilt, by the malicious intentions of his mind, and the depravations of his will, by which the malignity of any crime is to be meaſured, and God will judge us at the laſt day. The ſcribes and Phariſees hypocritical profeſſion of their innocency, was not ſufficient to exempt them from the imputation of their forefather's murder, and ſacrilege, whilſt they retained and abetted their principles, upon which that ſevere woe is denounced upon them. Becauſe ye build the tombs of the Prophets, and garniſh the ſepulchres of the righteous, and ſay, if we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the Prophets. Wherefore ye be witneſſes unto yourſelves that ye are the children of them which killed the Prophets. Fill ye up then the meaſure of your fathers, ye ſerpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye eſcape the damnation of Hell? Matt. xxiii. 29, &c. If therefore we may thus by the ſecret approbation of our judgment of any crime contract its guilt, certainly much more by commending, excuſing, extenuating, or defending it, which not only juſtifies evil, but encourages, and confirms men in the practice of it; and has ſo much more malignity in its nature, in that neither temptation, nor infirmity can be pleaded in its behalf. Nay farther, John aſſerts, that the very wiſh of ſucceſs towards it, can render the ſpeaker an accomplice. If there come any unto you (ſays he, Eph. ii. 10, 11.) and bring not this doctrine, Receive him not into your houſe, neither bid him God-ſpeed; for he that biddeth him God-ſpeed is partaker of his evil deeds. Where we ſee that even a bare entertainment, civil ſalutation, or a flattering compliment beſtowed upon any perſon, relating to the vices, or errors wherein he is engaged, actually makes them ours, and derives the ſame guilt on our own heads. Paul carries this critical caſe of conſcience even yet to an higher extremity, and tells us, that a mere complacency in other's ſin appropriates it to us. For in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, chap. i. after having recounted the moſt horrible catalogue of ſins, that human nature can be guilty of in the utmoſt ſtate of corruption, he concludes all with that ſuperlative degree of it, that laſt finiſhing ſtroke, and (if I may be allowed ſo to ſpeak) hyperbole of iniquity, in this conſummate and dreadful character, Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death, not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them, Eph. ii. 32. Thus a man by a grateful reflection upon, and a wilful propenſity to vice, may be guilty of all the miſchief and calamity, all the villany and debauchery that was ever committed by mankind; and by the help of a lively memory, and a lewd imagination, ſpiritually act over all the moſt flagitious, and heinous impieties, that the ſoul is capable of repreſenting, the Devil of ſuggeſting, and the united annals of hiſtorians recording. He may be the very reverſe of his Bleſſed Saviour (of whom he ſo deſparately ſtands in need) not only bear, but poſitively guilty of the ſins of the whole world. Thus we may partake of other mens crimes, by a phantaſtical delight in them. And,

V. We may partake in other mens ſins, by giving offence, or ſcandalous example. As men are members of ſociety, they ſtand reſponſible not only for the poſitive legality of the actions, as conſidered in themſelves, and their own natures, ſolely with reſpect to the ſubject-matter of them, but alſo for their relative conſequences, as they may affect the conſciences of others, to which we are bound by the laws of charity to give no violation, diſturbance, or occaſion of tranſgreſſing; and in all our deportment to conſult not if only its lawfulneſs, but its decency, and expediency, with regard to our brethren, againſt whom we may ſin, (as Paul ſays, in the admirable ſtate of this caſe, 1 Cor. viii. 10.) and wound their weak conſciences, and ſin againſt Chriſt. Thus the abuſe even of an innocent liberty cannot be juſtified by a good intention, and we are liable to anſwer for the fall of thoſe to whom we become a ſtumbling-block, and a rock of offence. And if we are thus obnoxious for the conſequences of even our lawful actions, how much higher will the obligation riſe in the ill effects of thoſe that are really in themſelves unlawful? Here we propagate our malignity, ſpread our infection like a walking peſtilence, communicate our poiſonous influence to all about us, and trangreſs as it were, by proxy.

Number and example carry a much more controuling evidence, than the demonſtration of reaſon and argument. For theſe are viſible to the eye, and ſtrike quicker and deeper upon the imagination, than principles and ſpeculations upon the underſtanding; which is deceived, and hurried away with a deſire of imitation, and is apt to deduce, and frame rules by examples, inſtead of examples by rules; eſpecially where they fall in with the corrupted inclinations of nature, and have the advantage of being well recommended, they ſcarce fail to ſhock the moſt conſtant virtue, to confirm thoſe that are already in a vicious courſe, and pervert weak and unſtable perſons into ſin and error, who have not their ſenſes exerciſed, to diſcern betwixt good, and evil. And thus,

Whether we follow or lead others, we both ways become partakers of their ſins. In the firſt caſe the temptation is very ſtrong, and without God's preventing grace, almoſt irreſiſtible: For a man muſt have a ſteady government over himſelf and his paſſions, together with an inflexible eye fixed on his duty, and an unſhaken contempt of the world, and its flatteries and cenſures, he muſt be ſtanch in his reſolutions, and maſter of his conduct, neither to be corrupted by ſhame, hopes or fears, that is not born down in a throng, and ſunk in the tide of popular authority. For when once vice gets into faſhion, it makes religion look ſingular, and uncreditable. On the other hand, let but a man of figure and character, of intereſt and quality, lead the way, how many implicit and fawning proſelytes will follow the temporizing courtier, like beaſts in a track, with a refined underſtanding to give up their creed, abandon their old friends, with their unprofitable principles, careſs their moſt implacable enemies, and betray and ſacrifice both Church and ſtate to their inſatiable luſt, pride, avarice and ambition! Such a man, like lucifer, muſt fall with, and damn his legions, and like him too, be accountable for all the villany, treachery, and rebellion, into which his helliſh example ſeduced them.

VI. We may be partakers of other men's ſins, by authorizing, propagating, or publiſhing any hereſy, falſe doctrine, ſchiſm, faction, irreligion or immorality. For theſe corrupt and debauch men's minds; and conſequently influence, and pervert their lives. For it is very rarely ſeen, that wicked principles lie ſtill, and dormant in the conſcience, and not exert, and ſhew themſelves in action: And he that lays the poiſon is the cauſe of his death who ſwallows it. He that puts a cheat, and lye upon another, leads him hoodwinkt into falſhood, and miſtake, and when once a man is got into error, he goes headlong, and blindfold into perdition. There is a ſtrange infatuation, and as it were ſort of witchcraft in falſe doctrine, that unaccountably beſots, and ſtupifies the reaſon; and ſcarce was there ever any broached, however impious or abſurd, but found ſome patrons and proſelytes, to believe and maintain it.

Are not therefore all the vile enormities, that are the natural product of wild, licentious, and enthuſiaſtick opinions, to be charged back upon the original author, in whom they muſt all center, and conterminate, as in that root of bitterneſs from whence they ſprung? Heterodoxy, and blaſphemy, lewdneſs, and prophaneneſs, are of ſuch a black, and frightful complection in themſelves, that repreſented in their native deformity, they would gain few votaries in the world: Therefore theſe ſpiritual panders in iniquity cover the odious monſter with artificial guiſes, and diſſembled colours, to make it look amiable, and engaging. And when ſophiſtry, and falſe wit cloath the fallacy, they eaſily ſeduce, and beguile the ignorant, and vicious; and men are oftentimes tempted to ſwallow that diet for the ſauce, which they would otherwiſe loath, and nauſeate. When the directors of mens conſciences turn impoſtors, and betray, and miſlead them into thoſe ſins they ſhould teach them to avoid, ſuch pernicious infidelity to their Sacred Office, ought juſtly to entitle them, to all thoſe repeated woes, denounced by God and Chriſt againſt thoſe falſe prophets, and Phariſaical doctors, who perverted the Divine Law, and made even the Bleſſed Word of God, the ſad inſtrument of damnation to mankind.

Thus in all theſe inſtances, we ſee there is an union, or as it were confederacy in vice, it joins hand in hand, and draws out into leagues, and combinations; its contagion ſpreads like a leproſy; there is no breathing in its air with ſafety; we cannot look on it without endangering our health and innocence, nor touch it without uncleanneſs and pollution. In all theſe caſes there is a communication of guilt both backward and forward, whereby we become partakers of other men's ſins. In the commander, parent, or governor, it recoils upon the perſon in authority, baſely abuſing his power, proſtituting the vicegerency of God to execrable purpoſes, betraying his ſacred truſt and commiſſion, and violating his faith and honour, in conniving at, conſenting to, or concealing thoſe impieties, we ought to puniſh, prevent or reſtrain, we are poſitively acceſſory to their commiſſion, by a tacit approbation, and a conſcious and cowardly forbearance.

By adminiſtring counſel, direction, or aſſiſtance towards them, we act the part of the tempter himſelf, inſtigating evil, and promoting the kingdom of darkneſs, and the deſtruction of our fellow-creatures. In commending, approving, or defending any crime, we appropriate it to our ſelves, tranſgreſs at ſecond hand, become the guardians of iniquity, and commence the Devil's champions, to fight his battles, and maintain his cauſe, and repreſent him in the moſt deteſtable quality of his nature, a delight in the diſhonour of God, and the miſery, and ruin of mankind. In giving offence by our actions, we uſe our liberty for a cloak of maliciouſneſs, and make what would be otherwiſe innocent, culpable. By a ſcandalous life and example, we derive a reproach upon our holy profeſſion, and muſt anſwer for thoſe that are ſeduced by its baleful and infectious influence. By inſtilling, or propagating heterodox, ſchiſmatical, atheiſtical, factious, or immoral principles into others, we turn mere antichriſts, and emiſſaries of hell, and muſt anſwer for all the ſouls that periſh thro' our treachery, guile, or deluſion.

Ver. 23. — For thy ſtomach's ſake.] In which permiſſion to drink wine, the Apoſtle tacitly condemns drunkenneſs, and the drinking of any thing to exceſs.

Ver. 24. Some mens ſins, &c.] See Gal. v. 19.

CHAP. VI.

1 Of the duty of ſervants. 3 Not to have fellowſhip with new fangled teachers. 6 Godlineſs is great gain, 10 and love of money the root of all evil. 11 What Timothy is to flee, and what to follow, 17 and whereof to admoniſh the rich. 20 To keep the purity of true doctrine, and to avoid profane tanglings.

LET as many ſervants as are under the yoke, count their own maſters worthy of all honour; that the name of God, and his doctrine be not blaſphemed.

2 And they that have believing maſters, let them not deſpiſe them, becauſe they are brethren: but rather do them ſervice, becauſe they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. Theſe things teach and exhort.

3 If any man teach otherwiſe, and conſent not to wholſome words, even the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to the doctrine which is according to godlineſs;

4 He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about queſtions and ſtrifes of words, whereof cometh envy, ſtrife, railings, evil ſurmiſings,

5 Perverſe diſputings of men of corrupt minds, and deſtitute of the truth, ſuppoſing that gain is godlineſs: from ſuch withdraw thy ſelf.

6 But godlineſs with contentment is great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

8 And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content,

9 But they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men in deſtruction and perdition.

10 For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while ſome coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows.

11 But thou, O man of God, flee theſe things, and follow after righteouſneſs, godlineſs, faith, love, patience, meekneſs.

12 Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art alſo called, and haſt profeſſed a good profeſſion before many witneſſes.

13 I give thee charge in the ſight of God, who quickneth all things, and before Chriſt

Jeſus, who before Pontius Pilate witneſſed a good confeſſion;

14 That thou keep this commandment without ſpot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

15 Which in his times he ſhall ſhew, who is the bleſſed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords;

16 Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee: to whom be honour and power everlaſting. Amen.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy:

18 That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate;

19 Laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy truſt, avoiding profane and vain bablings, and oppoſitions of ſcience falſly ſo called:

21 Which ſome profeſſing, have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

¶ The firſt to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefeſt city of Phrygia Pacatiana.

In this chapter the Apoſtle gives Timothy ſome further directions concerning his inſtruction of ſervants in particular, whether they were ſubject to infidel or Chriſtian maſters, ver. 1, 2. and that he ſhould exhort them to withdraw from corrupt and unſound teachers, whom he deſcribes from their ill qualities, and the bad effects thereof, ver. 3—5. illuſtrating his argument by a principle or doctrine, oppoſite to one of theirs, ſhewing the great gain of godlineſs with content, ver. 6. Whereupon he preſſes content,

(1.) From the naked eſtate both of our birth and death, ver. 7.

(2.) From a ſuppoſed enjoyment of neceſſaries, ver. 8.

(3.) From the manifold and damnable miſchiefs of a fixed reſolution to be rich, which is attended with many temptations and hurtful luſts, ver. 9. and with all ſorts of evil in general, but eſpecially with apoſtacy and piercing ſorrows, ver. 10. Then

He exhorts him to approve himſelf, a faithful miniſter and man of God.

(1.) By ſhunning the courſes of falſe teachers.

(2.) By preaching the contrary virtues, ver. 11, 12.—enforced by the conſideration of his calling and profeſſion, ver.—12. To all which he excites and quickens him by a ſolemn charge, wherein the manner, ver. 13. the matter, and the continuance of his preaching, ver. 14. as well as by a glorious deſcription of Chriſt, who ſhall then appear; or of God, who ſhall bring it to paſs, and by a doxology, ver. 15, 16. Then

He tells him how to deal with or inſtruct rich men, ver. 17—19. And ſo,

Concludes the Epiſtle with a final exhortation, ſhewing what he is to keep, and what he muſt ſhun; and with his Apoſtolical farewel, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 1.— Under the yoke.] i. e. In ſervitude, or hirelings.

Ver. 2.— Faithful.] i. e. Believing.

Ver. 12. Fight the good fight of faith.] See 2 Tim. iv. 7.

Ver. 13.— Confeſſion.] Or, rather profeſſion.

Ver. 20.— Avoiding prophane and vain bablings, &c.] See ch. i. 4, 6. and ch. iv. 7. and the notes on the 1 Cor. ch. iii. for ſays the Apoſtle above, at ch. iv. 8. Godlineſs is profitable unto all things, having promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. And therefore, on the review of theſe Apoſtolical inſtructions, exhortations and maxims, which Paul ſends to Timothy. I ſhall conclude this Epiſtle with A Diſſertation of Religion.

I ſhall begin my enquiry with an account of the general nature of religion. I ſhall offer at a general definition, or deſcription of the thing ſignified by that term, and ſhew what religion is, and of what parts it does conſiſt. And,

Firſt, As to the general nature of religion, whether natural or revealed, both Heathen and Chriſtian authors give much the ſame deſcription of it, though their forms of expreſſion are ſomewhat different.

As for the ancient Heathens, what Tully ſays concerning it may be ſufficient to ſhew their ſenſe. Religion, ſays he, is that which brings a due regard and reverence to ſome ſuperior nature, or being, which men call Divine. And again, men call that by the name of religion, ſays he, which expreſſes a fear and reverence of the gods. In both which places, he joins internal and external worſhip both together; the former he expreſſes by regard and fear, and the latter by reverence, or an outward ſhew of that inward regard men ought to have for God. And the only difference of the Heathen from the Chriſtian, with reſpect to either of their notions of religion, conſiſts in this; that the ſuperſtition of the former directed his worſhip, both internal and external, to fictitious deities, to thoſe that were no gods: Whereas the more refined devotion of the latter directs his whole worſhip and ſervice, his fear, regard, and reverence, to one only true God.

Accordingly, a modern author makes the ſum of religion to be this; "That rejecting all falſe gods, we rightly and ſincerely worſhip the true and only Lord our God; not by any external repreſentation or image of him, but with a moſt religious and hearty faith, a filial fear, and a conſtant love and affection towards him, and obſervance of him.

Others again give a more full and perfect definition of religion, thus; that it is that which affords the right means of coming to the knowledge of God, and directs the true method of worſhipping and ſerving him; and aſſures our hopes of future reward from him for ſo doing. And they tell us that it conſiſts of theſe particulars; viz. love, faith, hope and obedience. To which purpoſe, Paul calls the Chriſtian religion, the acknowledging of the truth which is after, or according to Godlineſs, Tit. i. 1. By which he muſt be underſtood to mean, the juſt apprehenſion, and true worſhip of God, which this doctrine of truth and Godlineſs teaches and exacts of us; together with an equal obſervance of all thoſe Sacred Laws, by which we are required to love and honour him.

But the beſt definition of religion I have met with, as that which furniſhes us with the moſt clear and adequate notion of the thing ſignified by that term, is this; "That religion is that general habit of reverence towards the Divine Nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worſhip and ſerve God after ſuch a manner, as we conceive to be moſt agreeable to his will, and moſt likely to procure his favour and bleſſing."

And now, ſecondly, for the diviſion of religion into the ſeveral parts of which it conſiſts; there are ſome who make it conſiſt of only two, and others of three parts.

Again, they that divide into only two parts, do differ ſomewhat as to the terms of the diviſion.

For, firſt, ſome will have the parts of which religion does conſiſt to be, that worſhip of God which is natural, which all men, by the light of nature, are prompted and inclined to pay him; and that which is inſtituted, or revealed, which God has expreſly declared to be pleaſing and acceptable to him.

But, ſecondly, others make the parts of religion to be theſe; the true knowledge of God, and the worſhip which is due unto him. And of theſe, there are ſome who have obſerved, and it may be not amiſs, that the knowledge of God is ſometimes put for both. For the Scriptures ſeem to ſpeak to this purpoſe in ſeveral places, on ſeveral occaſions. Thus our Saviour tells us, John xvii. 3. This is life eternal, that is, the way and means of attaining to it, to know the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom he hath ſent. So his beloved diſciple John, Hereby we know that we know God, if we keep his commandments, 1 Ep. ii. iii. 4. And again, He that ſaith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. And again, ch. iv. 7, 8. Every one that loveth, is born of God, and knoweth God; but he that loveth not, knoweth not God. In all which places, by the knowledge of God, is meant, ſuch a knowledge of him as is practical, not ſuch as is only theoretical, which conſiſts and acquieſces in naked ſpeculation; for ſuch a knowledge as this the wicked and diſobedient have, as our Saviour intimates, Luke xii. 47. And even the Devils themſelves are endued with it, as James informs us, Jam. ii. 19.

But theſe, and the like diviſions of religion into two parts only, are too general to be fully and clearly underſtood, without large, and ſometimes far-fetched explications, and many ſubdiviſions of each part; and therefore, I think, thoſe authors make it much more eaſy and intelligible, who divide religion into three parts, thus; that it conſiſts in a true and firm, ſincere and hearty faith in God; a lively hope of a future happy ſtate of eternal life and glory; and an uniform and univerſal obedience to the will of God, in which all kinds of worſhip are included. Now,

There is only one thing more behind to be attempted, and that is, to give a ſomewhat more particular account of what religion, that is, which in contradiſtinction to all others is known to be, and is therefore rightly ſtiled the true religion.

And here, I muſt confeſs, if there were no better light vouchſafed us, than we have by nature, we ſhould be very much to ſeek for ſatisfaction in this matter. It being undeniable, that no man of himſelf could ever have found out the way to happineſs, nor the means of coming to a ſaving knowledge of Divine Affairs. But if God had not, out of his infinite goodneſs to us, taught mankind what they ought to know and do, both before and ſince the fall, we muſt have been in perfect ignorance of God, and all religion, and of the true eſpecially, from the beginning of the world, till now. But now, that God has been pleaſed to aſſiſt and ſtrengthen the light we have by nature, by the ſupernatural light of revelation, not only having ſpoken to the ſons of men in former ages by his Prophets, but in theſe later more expreſly by his ſon, as the author to the Hebrews tells us, Heb. i. 1. we may, by this aſſiſtance, come to ſuch a knowledge of his will, of what will pleaſe him, and be infinitely beneficial to ourſelves, as, how neceſſary ſoever it be, by the light of nature we could not have.

For, I conceive, there is a difference betwixt what knowledge we by unaſſiſted nature could acquire, and that which we have by tradition from our anceſtors; the former would be very little, next to none; and perhaps it is no paradox to ſay, that all our knowledge comes by ſuch tradition, or by obſervation, or by inſpiration, and that we ſhould have none at all, without ſome one or other of theſe helps. And therefore, it is not without reaſon we ſuppoſe, nay, there ſeems to be the greateſt reaſon for the ſuppoſition, that the firſt man, as ſome man muſt be firſt, had all his knowledge, of Divine Affairs eſpecially, by inſpiration; and from him the reſt of mankind have received their knowledge, by either oral, or Scriptural Tradition.

And even that faculty of reaſon, by which we are diſtinguiſhed from all inferior beings, as it ſpeaks our high extraction that we are the off-ſpring of God, Acts xvii. 28. ſo it likewiſe teaches us, that all our knowledge comes originally from him, by whatſoever intermediate ways it be conveyed unto us. Even the very Heathen were obliged for all their little knowledge of religion and Divine Affairs, to the ſelf-ſame original; and this their knowledge too, at firſt, was clean and pure, though afterwards, in paſſing through ſo many various channels, it was, by degrees, moſt wretchedly corrupted; ſo that, inſtead of one only true, they believed and worſhipped many gods, who were no other, for the moſt part, than the moſt profligate of men, nay, and the very Devils too had oftentimes the greateſt ſhare of their devotions.

Now, that the Heathens thought themſelves obliged, and even under a neceſſity, becauſe of the imperfection of the light of nature, to be inſtructed and directed by the gods they worſhipped as to matters of religion, is very plain from this one inſtance of their care in this reſpect that Tully gives us.

"The Athenians ſending, on a time, to aſk Apollo Pithius what religions they ſhould embrace and hold? The oracle gave anſwer, thoſe chiefly which were held by their fore-fathers. And they again demanding, ſince the religions of their anceſtors were various, which of thoſe various religions they ſhould pitch upon? The oracle again replied, the beſt. And, truly, to give you Tully's obſervation upon this, that religion is to be accounted the moſt ancient and moſt agreeable to God, which, upon a ſtrict enquiry, appears to be the beſt." Now,

Though this anſwer of the oracle was varniſhed over with ſome ſhew of what was good, yet the imperfection of it ſhews, it was not God that gave it. For he, for certain, would have told them, not only that they ſhould embrace the beſt, but likewiſe which was beſt; and would have furniſhed them with all thoſe marks and characters of true religion, by which they might have known it from all others. However, this ſingle inſtance is enough to ſhew, that the very Heathens had a ſenſe of the inſufficiency of nature's light; and believed they could not come to the knowledge of the truth, without Divine Aſſiſtance and Inſtruction.

It is true, they were not without ſome notions, ſuch as they were, of true religion; but their great unhappineſs was this, that for want of a better and more perfect light than that of nature, all their notions and deſcriptions of it were either in ſome reſpects deficient, or in others redundant; that is, they either wanted ſomething that was neceſſary, or abounded in ſomething that was needleſs, or ſomething that was falſe. I think it may not be amiſs to give an inſtance of each kind. And, for the firſt,

An ancient Heathen Writer, ſpeaking of thoſe that in his judgment were to be eſteemed religious, gives us this deſcription of them; That they were ſuch as in their whole converſation rightly diſtinguiſhed betwixt things proper to be done, and things that ought to be avoided. The deficiency of which conſiſts in this, that here is nothing ſaid of faith or hope, which are the foundation of a virtuous life; but all is confined to practice, which is only the ſuperſtructure, and conſequent upon the other two. Then, for the latter,

Let us hear what Tully ſays, That worſhip of the gods, ſays he, is beſt, moſt chaſte and holy, and moſt full of piety, when men always honour them with a pure, entire, and incorrupt mind and voice. Now, this deſcription is ſomewhat more full and comprehenſive than the former, as taking in the mind and body both, the heart and the mouth, internal affections as well as external actions. But it is imperfect in one reſpect, as it makes no mention either of faith or hope; and ſuperfluous in another, as it affirms a plurality of gods, whereas the true religion knows and owns but one.

After all, therefore, the only means of coming to the knowledge of the truth, is Divine Revelation; by which I mean, thoſe ſacred Scriptures, which, the Apoſtle tells us, are given by inſpiration of God, and are profitable, that is, ſufficient for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs, 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. and will make a man perfect, throughly furniſhed to good works, and wiſe, in all things neceſſary to be believed and done, in order to ſalvation, ver. 15. And in theſe Sacred Writings we are taught, that True religion conſiſts in faith, hope and love. In faith in one only true and living God, who is three diſtinct Perſons, ſons, Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, in the ſame one undivided Eſſence and Divinity; which faith reſpects not only the Nature and Attributes, but alſo the precepts, promiſes and threatnings of that one God, in reference to this and the other world, ſo that we are to believe in him as to what he is, and to believe him as to what he ſays: In hope alſo, which being built upon the promiſes of God, which in his Son Chriſt Jeſus, are Yea and Amen, will never make us aſhamed, 2 Cor. i. 20. Rom. v. 5. 2 Cor. vi. 6. And laſtly, in love unfeigned, which implies and requires impartial obedience to all the laws and commands of God, whether they reſpect our duty to him, our neighbour, or our ſelves.

This, I ſay, is the general account of true religion, and is proper only to Chriſtianity; which is ſo called in contradiſtinction to all other religions, whether Pagan, Mahometan, or Jewiſh, which either do not acknowledge the only true God, or elſe do horribly abuſe and corrupt his worſhip. And the epithet of Chriſtian is given to this religion, both becauſe it was revealed by Chriſt, who, as the Holy Scriptures tell us, came forth out of the boſom of the eternal Father, (John i. 18.) to that end and purpoſe; and alſo becauſe it is that religion only, which expreſly teaches Chriſt as the alone Saviour of mankind, 2 Cor. v. 19 by whom, and through whom, we are reconciled to God, and have Remiſſion of ſins, Acts x. 43. and laſtly, becauſe all true Chriſtians do hold and profeſs that form of doctrine.

In ſhort, the Chriſtian religion is that form of Godlineſs which moſt plainly ſhews the power of it in thoſe that live according to its rules; and does beſt comfort and agree with all the moſt eminent diſtinguiſhing characters of true religion. For, firſt, the Chriſtian religion does more fully and effectually ſet forth God's glory, than any other religion in the world: Secondly, it contains and preſcribes the beſt, the plaineſt, and moſt perfect rules of holineſs towards God, and of righteouſneſs towards men: And laſtly, to name no more, it ſets us in the ſafeſt, moſt direct and ready way, the way that is moſt ſuitable to God's glory, and to our own neceſſities, to be reconciled to our offended maker, and ſo to make ſure of his grace and favour here, and of our own eternal welfare hereafter. And therefore,

I will ſhew what a natural tendency religion has, if rightly underſtood, and duly practiſed, to make us happy both at preſent and for ever.

As to the preſent life, "The nature of man, by reaſon of thoſe other capacities common to him with plants and brutes, may ſtand in need of ſeveral things, to render his condition pleaſant and comfortable in this world; ſuch as health, riches, reputation, ſafety, &c. And herein is the great advantage of religion, that beſides the principal work which it does for us, in ſecuring our future welfare in another world, it is likewiſe the moſt effectual means to promote our happineſs even in this.

And as to the next life, Mankind being endowed with ſuch faculties, whereby they are made capable of apprehending a Deity, and of expecting a future ſtate after this life; it will hence follow, that the proper happineſs of man muſt conſiſt in the perfection of thoſe faculties, and in ſuch a ſtate as may reconcile him to God, and entitle him to the Divine Favour, and afford him the beſt aſſurance poſſible of a Bleſſed Immortality hereafter. Which nothing elſe but religion can ſo much as pretend to, and no religion, but the Chriſtian, can accompliſh.

Nor is religion thus advantageous only to ſingle perſons, but alſo to whole ſocieties of men. And therefore, the Heathens uſed to ſtile it, The foundation of human ſociety; the defence of magiſtracy; and the ſupport of laws and good government, &c. And indeed, to ſpeak all in a word, there is nothing, whereby thoſe who are under authority are ſo firmly held to their duty, and thoſe who govern are ſo effectually defended in their office, as by religion and the fear of God.

In ſhort, it has been, and ſtill is, the general ſenſe and opinion of mankind, That all things ſhall turn to good to them that ſerve God, but to evil to them that deſpiſe him. Eſpecially with reſpect to another world, That a never-failing happineſs hereafter ſhall follow and crown all the good works we do here; and therefore, that we ought to be very careful, that our whole behaviour here be good, in order to that happineſs.

And on this account, we may ſuppoſe, it is, that in all ages of the world, as men have generally thought themſelves obliged to acknowledge and worſhip ſuch deities as were known and worſhipped by their anceſtors; ſo all have thought it their intereſt, at leaſt to make a ſhew of religion, and there have been very few, if any ſo debauched, as not to do ſome good on ſome occaſions. To this purpoſe Tully ſomewhere tells us, all men are influenced by religion, more or leſs, and think themſelves obliged to retain and worſhip the gods of their own country, which they have received to own from their forefathers.

And then, ſurely, we that are Chriſtians, who profeſs the beſt religion that ever was publiſhed to the world, and have ſo much better aſſurances of both preſent and eternal happineſs, on condition of our living up to our profeſſion, than any people under Heaven ever had; We, I ſay, have all the reaſon in the world to look well to our behaviour, and to be ſo much more religious than other men have been, or could be, by how much more glorious and certain the rewards of virtue are to us, than they were, before our Saviour came, to any other people. If we are not, we may expect the very Heathens to riſe up in judgment with us, and condemn us, Matt. xii. 41. But if we are religious, according to the advantages, and helps, and encouragements we have to be ſo; then we ſhall be not only happy here, but for ever bleſſed and glorious ſaints hereafter.

To conclude all, therefore, the Apoſtle tells us, that Godlineſs, or religion, is profitable unto all things, having promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. iv. 8. And therefore, as he adviſes in another place, 2 Cor. vii. 1. Having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, and endeavour for the time to come, to perfect holineſs in the fear of God: Knowing that he is faithful who has promiſed, Heb. x. 23. and that, therefore, if we do his will, we ſhall not miſs of our reward.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

Second Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,

TO

TIMOTHY.

The INTRODUCTION.

The deſign of this Sacred Epiſtle, is again to ſtir up Timothy to be zealous and diligent in his office; patient in troubles, and conſtant in holy doctrine, which he had been taught by Paul; as alſo to warn him againſt the falſe teachers, whether Jews or others, (as in the former Epiſtle) of their ſly behaviour, and their fooliſh queſtions and fables; and to inſtruct him further how to behave himſelf, in imitation of Paul's own example, manner of life and patience, that at laſt he might obtain with him a crown of life, which Paul himſelf ſhortly expected; for he was ready to be offered, and the time of his departure was at hand, ch. iv. 6.

The names of Jannes and Jambres, two Egyptian magicians, who withſtood Moſes (when he wrought the miracles before Pharaoh) ch. iii. 8. are not mentioned by Moſes in his hiſtory, but as Grotius and Dr. Hammond obſerve on that text, they were recorded in ſome ancient records of the Jews, extant and known in the Apoſtle's time. And,

It is to this Epiſtle in particular, that we owe our greateſt bulwark againſt that Popiſh uſurpation of a power to forbid the reading of the Scriptures in the Vulgar Tongue, under certain limitations, for in ch. iii. 16, 17. our Apoſtle gives two noble commendations of the Holy Scriptures, the perfect rule of our faith and life: Firſt, That of their Divine Original, All Scripture is given by inſpiration of God. Secondly, That of their general uſefulneſs. And this again is farther illuſtrated, by inſtancing, firſt, in the ſeveral particulars, to which that uſefulneſs extends, The Scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs. Secondly, By declaring the degree of this uſefulneſs, and the efficacy of the Scriptures in thoſe reſpects, for that by their means the man of God is capable of becoming perfect, and throughly furniſhed unto all good works.

By the man of God, the matter is not great whether we underſtand, (with ſome interpreters, Cajetan, Chemnitius, Hemingius, Vatablus, Caſtalio,) every good Chriſtian, whoſe heart and life is devoted to the ſervice and obedience of God; or, whether (with others, Scultetus, Grotius, Gerhard, &c.) the Biſhops and Paſtors of the Church; ſuch as Timothy himſelf was, and who being dedicated and retaining to God in a more peculiar manner, have a title to this character diſtinct from the reſt of mankind. For, in both ſenſes the argument comes all to one. Since what the paſtors are bound to teach, the ſame their flocks are bound to know, and believe, and do: So that this is but one thing conſidered under different reſpects. And therefore what is ſufficient or defective for a rule to men in one of theſe capacities, muſt conſequently be in proportion ſo to men in the other.

Once more: That the Scripture is a ſufficient ſupply for all the neceſſities of this kind, the Apoſtle declares, by ſaying, That the man of God may be perfected by it, and throughly furniſhed to every good work. For that cannot be perfect which wants any of its ſubſtantial parts, nor is he throughly furniſhed who is ſtill under a neceſſity of ſeeking ſupplies elſewhere. See the note on the place, ch. iii. 16, 17.

CHAP. I.

1 Paul's love to Timothy, and the unfeigned faith which was in Timothy himſelf, his mother, and grandmother. 6 He is exhorted to ſtir up the gift of God which was in him, 8 to be ſtedfaſt and patient in perſecution : 13 and to perſiſt in the form and truth of that doctrine which he had learned of him. 15 Phygellus and Hermogenes, and ſuch like are noted, and Oneſiphorus is highly commended.

PAUL an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, according to the promiſe of life, which is in Chriſt Jeſus ;

2 To Timothy my dearly beloved ſon : Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

3 I thank God, whom I ſerve from my forefathers with pure conſcience, that without ceaſing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day :

4 Greatly deſiring to ſee thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy :

5 When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt firſt in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice ; and I am perſwaded that in thee alſo.

6 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou ſtir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

7 For God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear ; but of power, and of love, and of a ſound mind.

8 Be not thou therefore aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord, nor of me his priſoner : but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the goſpel, according to the power of God ;

9 Who hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began,

10 But is now made manifeſt by the appearing of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, who hath aboliſhed death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the goſpel :

11 Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apoſtle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

12 For the which cauſe I alſo ſuffer theſe things ; nevertheleſs I am not aſhamed : for I know whom I have believed, and I am perſwaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him againſt that day.

13 Hold faſt the form of ſound words which thou haſt heard of me, in faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

14 That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the holy Ghoſt which dwelleth in us.

15 This thou knoweſt, that all they which are in Aſia be turned away from me ; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

16 The Lord give mercy unto the houſe of Oneſiphorus ; for he oft refreſhed me, and was not aſhamed of my chain.

17 But when he was in Rome, he ſought me out very diligently, and found me.

18 The Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day : And in how many things he miniſtred unto me at Epheſus, thou knoweſt very well.

In this chapter (after the inſcription and ſalutation, ver. 1, 2.) there follows,

I. An Introduction, wherein Paul teſtifies his great affection to Timothy, (by way of thankſgiving to God on his behalf.)

(1.) By the effects or ſigns thereof, as in ver. 3, 4. —— (2.) By the grounds and cauſes of it, viz. Timothy's tender affection to Paul, ver. — 4. and his unfeigned faith, ver. 5. and (3.) By his putting him in remembrance, —— implied in the word, wherefore ; and ſo he comes to

II. The body of the Epiſtle ; wherein he exhorts him to, (1.) A diligent improvement of his gifts and exerciſe of his office, received by ordination, ver. 6, 7.

(2.) Not to be aſhamed neither of the Goſpel, nor of Paul's ſufferings for the Goſpel ; but on the contrary, to be always ready to undergo any ſufferings that might befal him on account of the Goſpel, ver. 8—12.

(3.) To hold faſt the form of ſound words in faith and love, ver. 13.

(4.) To keep the treaſure of Goſpel-truths, miniſtry and gifts intruſted with him, ver. 14.

(5.) He minds him how baſely ſome had deſerted him, ver. 15. And,

(6.) Prays for mercy on the houſe of Oneſiphorus, becauſe he had been very kind to him, ver. 16—18.

Ver. 1. — Promiſe of life.] i. e. Of eternal life, which we are able to obtain, only through the redemption which came to mankind by Jeſus Chriſt ; ſee ver. 10.

Ver. 2. — Son.] In the Church of God, i. e. whom I have converted unto the faith of Chriſt.

Ver. 3. — Whom I have ſerved from my forefathers, &c.] See Acts xxii. 3. and xxiii. 1. and xxiv. 14.

Ver. 4. — Of thy tears.] Shed on my account ; becauſe, I am under perſecution and in bonds at Rome ; ſee ver. 8.

Ver. 5. — Thy mother Eunice.] See Acts xvi. 1.

Ver. 6. — The gift of God.] i. e. The miniſterial office of a biſhop.

Ver. 12. — Believed.] Or, truſted.

——— Againſt that day.] When the Lord ſhall come to judge the earth ; ſee ch. iv. 8.

Ver. 13. — The form of ſound words.] i. e. The creed, belief, or ſummary of the Goſpel of Chriſt, which I have given you for the trial of faith.

Ver. 14. That good thing, &c.] See 1 Tim. vi. 20.
Ver. 16. — My chain.] See Acts xxviii. 20.
Ver. 18. — In that day.] See the notes on ver. 12.

CHAP. II.

1 He is exhorted again to conſtancy and perſeverance. and to do the duty of a faithful ſervant of the Lord, in dividing the word aright, and ſhunning prophane and vain bablings. 17 Of Hymeneus and Philetus. 19 The foundation of the Lord is ſure. 22 He is taught whereof to beware, and what to follow after, and in what ſort the ſervant of the Lord ought to behave himſelf.

THOU therefore my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus.

2 And the things that thou haſt heard of me among many witneſſes, the ſame commit thou to faithful men, who ſhall be able to teach others alſo.

3 Thou therefore endure hardneſs, as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt.

4 No man that warreth, intangleth himſelf with the affairs of this life; that he may pleaſe him who hath choſen him to be a ſoldier.

5 And if a man alſo ſtrive for maſteries, yet is he not crowned except he ſtrive lawfully.

6 The husbandman that laboureth muſt be firſt partaker of the fruits.

7 Conſider what I ſay; and the Lord give thee underſtanding in all things.

8 Remember that Jeſus Chriſt of the ſeed of David was raiſed from the dead according to my goſpel:

9 Wherein I ſuffer trouble as an evildoer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound.

10 Therefore I endure all things for the elects ſakes, that they may alſo obtain the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Jeſus, with eternal glory.

11 It is a faithful ſaying. For if we be dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him:

12 If we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reign with him: if we deny him, he alſo will deny us:

13 If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himſelf.

14 Of theſe things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord, that they ſtrive not about words, to no profit, but to the ſubverting of the hearers.

15 Study to ſhew thy ſelf approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

16 But ſhun profane and vain bablings; for they will increaſe unto more ungodlineſs.

17 And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus.

18 Who concerning the truth have erred, ſaying that the reſurrection is paſt already; and overthrow the faith of ſome.

19 Nevertheleſs, the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt, depart from iniquity.

20 But in a great houſe there are not only veſſels of gold, and of ſilver, but alſo of wood, and of earth; and ſome to honour, and ſome to diſhonour.

21 If a man therefore purge himſelf from theſe, he ſhall be a veſſel unto honour, ſanctified and meet for the maſters uſe, and prepared unto every good work.

22 Flee alſo youthful luſts: but follow righteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart.

23 But fooliſh and unlearned queſtions avoid, knowing that they do gender ſtrifes.

24 And the ſervant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient,

25 In meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth;

26 And that they may recover themſelves out of the ſnare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

This chapter contains other directions and inſtructions to Timothy. As,

I. To be couragious and undaunted in propagating the truth, ver. 1, 2.

II. Not to ſhrink at any difficulties he met with, becauſe, as his calling is a warfare, he muſt expect hardſhip, ver. 3. and therefore he muſt not entangle himſelf with worldly affairs, ver. 4. otherwiſe he cannot expect a reward. This is

(1.) Proved and illuſtrated by two ſimilitudes, as of combatants ſtriving for maſtery, ver. 5. and of the husbandman, ver. 6.

(2.) Amplified by a direction to, and petition for him, v. 7.

III. He puts him in mind of that great article of the Chriſtian Faith, the Reſurrection of Chriſt, ver. 8. concerning which he ſhews,

(1.) His own ſufferings for the preaching and maintaining of it: And,

(2.) What ſupported and encouraged him under his ſufferings, becauſe he ſaw the Goſpel flouriſh in its progreſs, notwithſtanding all oppoſitions of the enemy, ver. 9. The benefit which the people of God reaped thereby, viz. the promoting their ſalvation, ver. 10. The conſideration of the great recompence he ſhall have for all his ſufferings, ver. 11, 12.—illuſtrated by its oppoſites, the danger of denying him, ver.—12. and of unbelief, ver. 13.

IV. To caution his hearers againſt ſtrife about words, ver. 14.

V. To approve himſelf to God in the diſcharge of his miniſtry, ver. 15.

VI. To ſhun vain bablings, confirmed by the reaſons, ver. 16, 17.—exemplified in the inſtance of Hymeneus and Philetus, ver.—17, 18. and amplified by the method which God has given man whereby to work out their ſalvation, ver. 19. and by a conſideration of the ſtate and condition of the Church in this world, which contains both good and bad members, ver. 20. To which he adds a direction how to become a veſſel of honour, ver. 21.

VII. To fly youthful luſts, and follow after the contrary virtues, ver. 22.

VIII. To avoid that which tends not to edification, but to ſtrife, ver. 23. amplified by the reaſons, ver. 24,25.—And inforced by the ſuppoſition of a double benefit that may enſue, viz. repentance, ver.—25. and a deliverance from the ſnares of Satan, ver. 26.

Ver. 1.—— In the grace.] Or thoſe gifts which God hath graciouſly, without any merit of thine own, beſtowed upon thee through the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 2.—— The things.] Or, ſound words, ch. i. ver. 13.

——— Among.] Or, before.

Ver. 3.—— Hardneſs.] i. e. Tribulation.

Ver. 4.—— That warreth.] Or, goeth out into the field of battle.

Ver. 5.—— Maſteries.] Or, to excel in the Olympic games. See 1 Cor. ix. 25.

Ver. 6. The husbandman that laboureth muſt be firſt partaker of the fruits.] Or, rather as the original has it, The husbandman labouring firſt, muſt be partaker of the fruits.

Ver. 8.—— Jeſus Chriſt of the ſeed of David.] See Matt. i. 1.

——— My Goſpel. See Rom. ii. 16.

Ver. 10. ——— Salvation.] See the notes on ch. iii. ver. 16.

Ver. 12.—— If we deny him, he, &c.] See Matt. x. 33. Mark viii. 38.

Ver. 14.—— Strive not about words.] See 1 Tim. vi. 21.

Ver. 15.—— Dividing.] Preaching.

Ver. 16.—— Shun prophane and vain bablings, &c.] See 1 Tim. vi.

Ver. 17.—— Canker.] Or, Gangrene in the fleſh of man.

Ver. 19.—— This ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his.] See John x. 14—27. and Numb. xvi. 5.

Ver. 21 —— From theſe.] Vain bablings and profane perſons. See above at ver. 16, 17. and 22, 23.

CHAP. III.

1 He advertiſeth him of the times to come, 6 deſcribeth the enemies of the truth, 10 propoundeth unto him his own example, 16 and commendeth the holy Scriptures.

THIS know alſo, that in the laſt days perilous times ſhall come.

2 For men ſhall be lovers of their own ſelves, covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemers, diſobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

3 Without natural affection, truce-breakers, falſe accuſers, incontinent, fierce, deſpiſers of thoſe that are good,

4 Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God;

5 Having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power thereof: from ſuch turn away.

6 For of this ſort are they which creep into houſes, and lead captive ſilly women laden with ſins, lead away with divers luſts,

7 Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

8 Now as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ſo do theſe alſo reſiſt the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith.

9 But they ſhall proceed no further: for their folly ſhall be manifeſt unto all men, as theirs alſo was.

10 But thou haſt fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpoſe, faith, long-ſuffering, charity, patience,

11 Perſecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lyſtra; what perſecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me.

12 Yea, and all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer perſecution.

13 But evil men and ſeducers ſhall wax worſe and worſe, deceiving, and being deceived.

14 But continue thou in the things which thou haſt learned and haſt been aſſured of, knowing of whom thou haſt learned them;

15 And that from a child thou haſt known the holy ſcriptures, which are able to make thee wiſe unto ſalvation, through faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

16 All ſcripture is given by inſpiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs:

17 That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works.

In this chapter the Apoſtle,

I. Prophetically forewarns Timothy of the dangerous ſeducers that ſhould infeſt the Church, ver. 1——9. And then,

II. Preſcribes remedies againſt them, ver. 10—17.

Ver. 1.—— In the laſt days.] See 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Pet. iii. 3. and Jude 18.

Ver. 3. Truce-breakers.] See Rom. i. 31.

—— Fale accuſers.] Or, make-bates.

Ver. 5. —— From ſuch turn away.] Or, do not keep company with them, nor admit them into the communion of the Chriſtian Church.

Ver. 8. —— Jannes and Jambres.] See the Introduction.

Ver. 11. —— Which came unto me, &c.] See the life of Paul before his Epiſtles in the general Introduction.

Ver. 15. —— The holy Scriptures.] Of the Old Teſtament, which he had learned of his grandmother and mother; ſee ch. i. 5.

Ver. 16. All Scripture is given by inſpiration, &c] See the latter part of the Introduction to this Epiſtle, and then note that from hence it is our Church has formed her doctrine concerning the rule of faith, in theſe words, The Holy Scripture containeth all things neceſſary to ſalvation, ſo that whatſoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it ſhould be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requiſite or neceſſary to ſalvation, Art. VI. of Religion. And if this be once acknowledged for truth, I do not ſee how any man ſo perſwaded, can deny the Scripture's ability of making us wiſe unto ſalvation, and being a compleat guide in points of faith and manners. And ſuch I ſhall endeavour to prove it, by ſhewing,

I. Firſt, What manner of perfection that is, which men ought to attribute to Scripture, and are warranted to expect from it.

II. Secondly, What general arguments we have to ground this opinion upon; and

III. Thirdly, How the Scripture anſwers this character in thoſe particular inſtances mentioned in this text. Now,

I. Scripture being in the nature of a medium or inſtrument directed to a certain end, the beſt and moſt regular way of coming to a right underſtanding in this matter, will be to take a ſhort view of the deſign of Scripture, and what degree of perfection is neceſſary to anſwer that deſign. Or to keep cloſe to Paul's expreſſion, ver. 15. To examine what is meant by ſalvation, and what is requiſite to qualify us for, and make us wiſe unto ſalvation.

1. Firſt, Salvation is but another word for that eternal happineſs, which God hath appointed to be the ultimate and chief good of human nature; this happineſs is propoſed not as our fate, but as our reward; and ſince every reward ſuppoſes ſome works in conſideration whereof the recompenſe is beſtowed, it implies, that men muſt contribute ſomething to their own happineſs, and cannot reaſonably hope to obtain it, without attending to thoſe conditions, upon the performance of which the reward is ſuſpended. It implies farther, that the notices of theſe conditions, and the right of appointing them, muſt come from, and are originally lodged in him, who propoſes and promiſes that recompenſe. And, if our expectations and deſires of this happy ſtate, be natural and univerſal, it will follow from hence too, that nature furniſhes mankind with ſome ſort of means and abilities, as well as inclinations, to aſpire after it: For the wiſdom and goodneſs of the Creator is moſt eminently ſeen in this; that he deludes none of his creatures with vain expectations, nor infuſes any ſuch deſires into them, as muſt of neceſſity be diſappointed.

Theſe abilities I take to have been given in thoſe general notions of good and evil, impreſt upon the mind of man, at his firſt creation. With regard to which, Paul mentions a law written in the hearts of thoſe, to whom the written law was not imparted, Rom. ii. 13, 14, 15. He obſerves the ſame pleaſing tranſports, the ſame melancholy miſgivings to riſe in their breaſts, according as their conſciences accuſe, or excuſe them: He declares, that in the laſt great day of account, they ſhall be judged upon this iſſue. Since then, there was a time, when man enjoyed no written word at all; ſince after ſome parts of the world were bleſt with ſuch revelation, yet others were unfortunate in the want of it; ſince even thoſe who had it not, were yet accountable for their actions, the conſequence is plain and neceſſary, that the Holy Scriptures are not the only method whereby God hath been pleaſed to inform men of their duty: They were not the firſt, they were not the univerſal, and conſequently not the ſole and perpetual inſtrument of all our privileges, and all our obedience.

2. But ſecondly, Whatever hopes men could by nature have, theſe had no other foundation, than a juſt and punctual performance; and therefore ſin quite altered the caſe, and made a farther revelation neceſſary. What Paul ſays elſewhere of the Jewiſh law, may with great truth, and in a very good ſenſe, be affirmed of all Scripture, that it was added becauſe of tranſgreſſion. To perſons thus,

3. Thirdly, That God in all his dealings with mankind does not act ſo much in proportion to his own fulneſs, as to our wants. And therefore, we have reaſon to look upon thoſe diſcoveries of his will to be perfect, which revealed, not all that could be revealed, but all that men had occaſion for. In this ſenſe the more ſparing revelations heretofore were perfect in their kind, though in degree and meaſure ſhort of ours. Whence I may argue,

4. Fourthly, That even all truths, which may have any tendency to direct men in their duty, are not particularly and expreſly to be found there; nor is it all neceſſary, or indeed, (humanly ſpeaking) poſſible, that they ſhould. And this directly meets with an opinion, unhappy in its conſequences, but entertained, (it is to be hoped) out of an honeſt zeal and well-meant reverence for theſe Bleſſed Writings. That I mean of mens not being allowed to do any thing, for which ſome expreſs command, or warrant, or at leaſt example may not be produced out of Scripture. I cannot now delay to ſhew the danger and uncertainty of governing our lives by the examples even of good men; but ſhall endeavour to prove the unreaſonableneſs of this rule in general, and to diſengage men from the many ſad ſuſpences and ſnares, which it is apt to bring unwary conſciences under, by theſe following particulars.

1. Firſt, As to the myſteries and doctrines peculiar to the Chriſtian Faith, ſuch as, the incarnation and ſatisfaction of our Bleſſed Saviour, the juſtification of ſinners by faith, the aſſiſtances of the Holy Spirit, the trinity of perſons in the Divine Eſſence, (which I make no ſcruple to call a neceſſary and diſtinguiſhing doctrine of the Chriſtian Religion.) In theſe the Scriptures are our abſolute and only rule, for they are branches of a new covenant, revelations of ſtupendous and important concern, ſetting forth free acts of mercy; ſuch as depended upon no neceſſary cauſes in nature; ſuch as concerned not man in his primitive ſtate; and therefore, not within the ken of reaſon. Theſe could come only from God, and upon him we are therefore to depend entirely for them. So that when there is ſufficient evidence of his having delivered any matters of this kind, all the reſt is to be taken upon content; and his truth and infinite wiſdom are a juſt foundation of our belief, how far ſoever the matter revealed may exceed our comprehenſion.

2. Secondly, In matters of practice the Scripture is our ſupreme, though not our only rule. Thoſe things which reaſon and nature teach, this enlarges and refines upon, and oftentimes confirms with a freſh ſanction. It exalts our virtues, and directs us to proceed upon nobler principles; teaches ſome duties not to be known without it, gives clearer convictions of ſuch as were known imperfectly; leads us to ends above nature, furniſhes means above the powers of nature; propoſes rewards Heavenly and Divine, and helps us to do more than mere men by their own diſcourſe could ever have done. So that revelation does not quench the light of nature, but adds freſh oil, and makes it burn the brighter; and by being more perfect, helping our dimneſs and dark ſight, and taking place above all other authorities, it is properly ſtiled by David, A candle to our feet, and a lantern to our paths, Pſal. cxix. 105. So that whatever this word teaches, which we might otherwiſe have known, has a double tye upon us; and that which either want of underſtanding or corruption of mind would have kept us in ignorance of, when found here, is to be received with ſubmiſſion and reverence, as an inviolable law, whatever fleſh and ſenſe, and worldly wiſdom may ſuggeſt or object to the contrary.

3. Thirdly, The perfection of Scripture does not confine itſelf to ſuch matters of faith and practice as are abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation, but it is liberal and well fraught with excellent rules both from improving our knowledge, and adorning our profeſſion. It conſults the beauty and gracefulneſs, as well as the life and being of Chriſtianity. It directs the ſhining of our light, and the winning over others by our prudence and good example; and leaves us general hints, the efficacy of which will depend upon the honeſty and diſcretion of particular applications to our own perſonal exigencies and conditions.

4. But fourthly, There are many caſes, where Scripture can have nothing at all to do, except by very remote conſequences, and ſo far only as is implied in the foregoing particular. Ten thouſand actions of human life there are, ſo trivial, as ſcarce to deſerve the deliberation of a ſingle thought. And to expect laws and deciſions from Almighty God in things of no importance, or moral good or evil, were to bring his Majeſty into contempt; and therefore, here diſcretion is our only guide. In ſhort, and to conclude this argument: The written Word of God is to be eſteemed ſufficient and perfect; but this is to be underſtood of having the ſufficiency of means to the end; and what may ſerve the purpoſes to which it was ordained. The perfection is that of an inſtrument, but then this, like all other inſtruments, requires an honeſt, ſkilful, and diligent hand to manage and apply it ſucceſsfully. And it is no diſparagement to the Scripture's character, that ſome by neglecting, and others by abuſing it, ſtill want that ſaving wiſdom it might give; nor does it at all take off from the perfection of this rule, that ſome caſes are ſo plain and obvious, as not to need its particular directions, and that others are of ſo little moment, as not to deſerve them. For,

In order to make Scripture a competent guide in the caſes that properly concern it, two things only are neceſſary; that it be ſufficiently particular and expreſs, and that it be plain and intelligible. That as much be delivered there as the occaſion requires, and, that it be delivered in ſuch a manner, as that men may improve by it, and attain to the knowledge of it. Both which, to any man who conſiders the uſes of Scripture, appear to be ſo neceſſarily required, and ſo greatly related to, that the ſame general arguments will prove both, and theſe that follow, (if I miſtake not) may contribute ſomething toward it.

Firſt, A conſideration of the author. Every imperfection in the effect is owing to ſome failure in the cauſe, a want of power if it be a neceſſary cauſe, or a want of will if it be a ſufficient and free cauſe. There was therefore excellent reaſon, why Paul ſhould begin his character of the Scripture's perfection, with an account of its being given by inſpiration of God; this introduction carrying in it a very ſignificant argument to enforce what follows. For,

Where indeed ſhould we expect perfection, if not from him, who is the ſource and ſum of all perfection? He whoſe power and wiſdom are infinite, was moſt likely to impreſs upon his own ordinances ſuch marks of excellency, as might diſtinguiſh them plainly, and convince the world they were his, by being worthy of him: And he, whoſe goodneſs and mercy are the eminent ſhining attributes of the Divinity, might reaſonably be preſumed to exerciſe that power and wiſdom, when an occaſion ſo important as the ſalvation of a whole world called for it. His own mere bounty put him upon the myſterious work of our redemption, and can we ſuppoſe, that the very terms upon which the ſucceſs and efficacy of that work depends, are not ſufficiently ſtated and made known?

We are told indeed, no writing can be a ſufficient rule, becauſe capable of different conſtructions, and that ſome living interpreter is neceſſary, upon whoſe ſenſe we may ſecurely rely: But what underſtanding is ſo ſhort, as not to ſee the weakneſs of this argument? For is any thing ſpoken that might not be written? And would not the ſame words when written, continue to be as full, as clear, as plain and diſtinct, as when ſpoken only? Is not any man's diſcourſe from his tongue as liable to be wreſted and perverted, as that from his pen? If then that living interpreter (whoever he be) might have his ſenſe committed to writing; and if that ſenſe when not written, lies open to the ſame danger of being miſunderſtood, as when it is written, then a written word may be as plain and ſufficient a rule as an oral one. And if Almighty God could expreſs himſelf as plainly and clearly as man, (which to deny were moſt abſurd and impious,) then nothing hinders, why the dictates of the Holy Ghoſt written in the Bible, might not be as ſafe, as full, as intelligible a direction, as any interpretations, or decrees, compoſed by any living perſons, or ſociety of perſons whatſoever. They might be ſo, I ſay, which proves a written rule capable of equal perfection with an oral one. And as the nature of the thing ſhews it capable, ſo the goodneſs of God gives juſt preſumption of its actually being ſo.

We are able indeed to give ſome account why human laws ſhould be obſcure; men may not be always happy in their expreſſions, or they may leave them intricate and dark, and ſtudiouſly contrive ſome profitable ambiguities: But God hath neither frailty nor intereſt to diſpoſe him thus. He ſpeaks on purpoſe to be underſtood; and what is ſpoken ſo as not to be underſtood, is ſo far forth as if not ſpoke at all. To leave men in darkneſs and diſtreſs, unfurniſhed with helps, the want of which muſt be their eternal ruin, this is what we think but ill agrees with the kind inclinations he hath otherwiſe expreſſed for our happineſs. And this will appear yet more improbable, if we conſider,

Secondly, What the particular matter is, of which the Scriptures chiefly conſiſt, and are intended to inſtruct us in. This is the ſecond covenant with fallen man; and that what other things are added there, are with ſubſervience to this great deſign. And can we ſuppoſe that theſe great charters and indentures are drawn imperfectly? In other ſciences there may be many common principles and helps derived from abroad; and theſe are ſuch as ſhine in ſome meaſure by each other's light. But the doctrines and myſteries of Chriſtianity are not in the power of nature or art to define; we have no further inſight here, than what the light from Heaven directs us to; and whatever of this kind God hath not made known to us, we are condemned to doubts and difficulties invincible, and can never bring ourſelves to know it all.

Thirdly, The ſufficiency and plainneſs of Scripture are both of them ſtrongly implied in faith and obedience, being made the conditions of everlaſting ſalvation; and unbelief and diſobedience threatned with hell and damnation, to as many as live under the knowledge and light of the Goſpel. For, if belief and practice muſt bring us to Heaven, then ſure God hath left a compleat ſyſtem of all things neceſſary to be believed or done; and if men ſhall be damned for not believing and not practiſing, then ſure thoſe directions are ſufficiently plain: Eſpecially too, if we remember, that theſe conditions are not calculated for the wiſe, or the learned, or the great only; but impoſed indifferently upon all degrees and capacities of men, of what ſize ſoever their underſtandings or their attainments be. For,

In regard no man is capable of believing or doing what he is not capable of knowing the ſenſe and meaning of; it muſt needs follow, that in the terms of ſalvation, God hath deſcended to the weak and common man; and made that which is neceſſary to all, eaſy and plain to all. The extremity of marking what is done amiſs, who, ſays the Pſalmiſt, may abide? But would not the marking and puniſhing what could not but be done amiſs, be a much more inſupportable extremity. And yet, admitting that men are condemned to everlaſting torments, for failure in that duty of which God never gave them ſufficient means of information, I cannot apprehend but that this is the caſe with them. The force of which argument in general, that God muſt needs have made ſufficient diſcoveries of his will, is ſo confeſſedly evident, that the only fault our adverſaries find with us for alledging it, is the confining theſe diſcoveries to Scripture only; to juſtify which inference, I add in the Fourth place, that we have no equal evidence for any other ſupplementary declaration of God's will, and therefore we have reaſon to look upon the Scriptures as a full and ſufficient one. Now, that ſuch evidence was abſolutely needful, appears from hence, that whatſoever mends and fills up the meaſure of any other law, and to which we muſt have our laſt recourſe and appeal, does by that means acquire not only equal, but in ſome ſort a ſuperior authority to what went before; and therefore, to be ſure, it ought to have its own authority, at leaſt as well confirmed, as that which it pretends to perfect. Now,

The Scriptures command our aſſent and obedience, as coming from God; that they came from him we are aſſured, by their author's giving proper and authentick teſtimonies of a commiſſion and inſpiration truly Divine; that the miracles in which that teſtimony conſiſted, were really performed, we have the report of enemies as well as friends to their doctrine; the proof of infinite converts won over by them, contrary to all the intereſt and inclinations of fleſh and blood; and laſtly, the concurrent conſent of the Church Univerſal in all ages, which alone (all circumſtances conſidered) is an evidence even credible in it ſelf.

Till therefore the advancers of traditions, and an infallible guide on the one hand, and till the pretenders to private illuminations on the other, can bring equal evidence for themſelves; but eſpecially while they continue the darkeſt controverſies in all religion; we are not to be blamed for not admitting them into competition; and ſhall do better to ſuſpect theſe pretences of vanity and enthuſiaſm, and project, than by admitting them to draw ſuch a meaning upon the words of this text, as might eaſily be ſhewed to introduce an inſpired Apoſtle, talking neither good argument, nor ſo much as coherent and common ſenſe. Hence

I infer, that, according to all we can reaſonably conceive of God, he muſt needs have made ſome competent proviſion for mens underſtanding their duty; they cannot eſcape eternal ruin without the knowledge of it: This knowledge, in the points peculiarly Chriſtian, could come to them by Divine Revelation only; it does not appear that God hath ſignalized and diſtinguiſhed any method or rule of this kind, in ſo eminent a manner as he hath done the Scriptures; and therefore we have reaſon to believe, and to reſpect the Scriptures, as that competent proviſion. And now, having gone through ſuch general arguments as ſeem moſt neceſſary, I come,

III. To ſhew in particular, how the Scriptures anſwer this character, with regard to the ſeveral inſtances of their uſefulneſs mentioned in the text.

1. Firſt, Paul ſays, the Scripture is profitable for doctrine, by which is commonly underſtood, a declaration of ſuch truths as are neceſſary to be believed. The ſum of what is requiſite in this point, conſiſts of a right information concerning God and our ſelves; what he is, and what we are and hope to be; what he hath done for our ſakes, and how we may reap the benefit of it in our own perſons, and become acceptable in his ſight. And,

Of this the Scripture gives a large and clear account. It traces us up to our firſt head, points to the rock whence we were hewn; deſcribes our happy and our healthful ſtate, tells when, and how, our innocence was loſt, and ſets forth both the ſickneſs and the cure. It preſents us with the leiſurely advances towards it, the perſonal revelations to the Patriarchs, the rites and figures of Moſes's law, the clearer predictions, and more refined precepts of the Prophets, and theſe accommodated to the ſeveral ſtages of the world, and tempered all in ſuch proportion, as the body diſeaſed gathered ſtrength to digeſt them. At laſt, when the fulneſs of time was come, and matters ripe for the laſt and moſt perfect revelation, it ſhews us the Saviour of the world, the Son of God, and in him all thoſe ſhadows and rough imperfect ſtrokes finiſhed and filled up, all thoſe prophecies centring together, with marvellous harmony and conſent.

To theſe I might add the ſignificant providences of God to his people the Jews, whereby Paul ſays they became ἡμῶν τύποι, patterns and images of the Chriſtian age; no leſs than in their law and way of worſhip. I might obſerve the mighty care and art of filling every book with ſignifications of the Meſſiah, his character, and his approach, ſometimes by prophecies aiming directly at him, ſometimes by mixed and more obſcure intimations, and thoſe breakings out of the Spirit from other ſubjects and perſons, into expreſſions too lofty and magnificent to be literally and ſtrictly true of any but of him. But, which comes nearer home, here we have our ſouls raiſed to higher and juſter notions of God and goodneſs; we are taught to worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth, a ſervice moſt ſuitable to the majeſty of his nature, and the dignity of our own: We ſee the adorable myſtery of the Son of God in fleſh and a human body, exalted to the right hand of the Majeſty on high, a Perſon truly Divine converſing with men, courting them to their happineſſes, preſſing, importuning; nay, which is moſt of all, dying for them, that they may live for ever. And whatever myſterious and intricate paſſages the Scripture may contain, for the exerciſe, ſhall I ſay, or for the humiliation of men, wiſe in their own conceits; yet theſe matters, which make the hiſtorical account of our redemption, are related in circumſtances ſo natural, and yet ſo moving, in language ſo eaſy, and ſo expreſſive too, that the moſt ſcrupulous, if a fair and honeſt reader, may be ſettled and convinced, and the plaineſt and groſſeſt underſtanding may be enlightned and edified by them. For, whatever darkneſs and miſts may now obſcure theſe ſaving truths, it is not from themſelves, or their original ambiguities, ſo much as from the ſtudied niceties of ſubtil and deſigning men; who, under pretence of diſtinguiſhing and explaining, have rather confounded and rendred them unintelligible; and, many times, diſtinguiſhed away even truth and piety it ſelf: But, bleſſed be God, we are not utterly at theſe mens mercies; for, to our comfort, the Apoſtle obſerves,

2. Secondly, That the Scripture is likewiſe profitable for reproof; by which is commonly underſtood the confuting of errors and corrupt opinions, which oppoſe or impair the truth. See Iſa. viii. 20. Matt. xxii. 29. Mark xii. 24. and Chryſoſt. in John hom. xl. Thus among the Jews, the law and the teſtimony was the touch and the trial, to which all new pretenders were to be brought. Thus our Saviour expreſly attributes the Sadduces error concerning the reſurrection and a future ſtate, to their not knowing the Scriptures. And to the ſame purpoſe the Apoſtle here ſends Timothy to the Scriptures, as a defence againſt thoſe corrupt and perillous times foretold in the beginning of this chapter.

The earneſt exhortations of all the primitive fathers, to be much converſant in theſe Holy Books; their placing all the miſchief of their diviſions to the account of neglecting ſo to do; the ſetting the two Teſtaments, in the midſt of the ancient and pureſt councils, as a common umpire between all contending parties; and infinite teſtimonies and commendations to this purpoſe, ſhew moſt evidently, that the written Word was always looked upon as the ſtandard of doctrine and faith; that to which all ought to have recourſe, to ſubmit to, and be finally concluded by. Traditionary articles, and infallible interpreters, had then no place, nor was it requiſite they ever ſhould: For though Peter ſays ſome Scriptures were wreſted to mens own deſtruction, yet he acquaints us withal, how they came to be ſo. They were, he ſays, the unlearned and unſtable, that did it, men not well principled, and of a reſtleſs temper. And if people will come to this rule with perverſe, unquiet minds, with a ſpirit of frowardneſs, and cavil, and contention, they may, no doubt, confound the cleareſt things: Beſides, which makes the objection much leſs formidable, Peter ſays the τὰ δυσνόητα, paſſages hard to be underſtood were principally concerned in this racking of the ſenſe. And ſo long as captious wits exerciſe upon theſe only, the conſequence is not ſo very great. They are the neceſſary points in which we maintain the ſufficiency of Scripture, and I hope it hath been proved, that what is not full and plain, cannot be neceſſary.

If men would read the Bible with honeſty and diligence, with meekneſs and modeſty, the world would quickly come to a good agreement in things requiſite to ſalvation; and for the reſt, we may entertain different notions, and yet all ſides be ſafe and quiet. And would men but preſerve all that charity and good temper, which becomes diſputes of ſmall importance, it would ſignify but little, whether ſuch controverſies were ever agreed or not. When mens eternal ſtate is brought into hazard, when the peace of the publick, or the order of the Church is broken, when private friendſhips ceaſe, and miſunderſtandings and bickerings ariſe; theſe are not the effects of difference in opinion, but of the vanity and indiſcretion, the intemperate heats, and bitter zeal of thoſe who differ, and not content to differ only, miſmanage and miſunderſtand matters. In ſhort, holding the faith in unity of ſpirit, and in the bond of peace both, is beſt promoted by righteouſneſs of life. And whoever ſhall examine the riſe and growth of hereſies and ſchiſms, will find that craft and not ignorance hath generally been at the bottom. Pride and avarice, and ambition, envy and licentiouſneſs, unreaſonable pertinaciouſneſs, and a deſire of popularity, and in one word, not ſo much the want as the abuſe of wit; theſe are the rank weeds that choak the good ſeed, that make the world unfruitful, and ſometimes even enſnaring. And to clear the ſoil of theſe nuſances muſt be every man's own care.

In ſhort, God hath done as much for us, as it became him to do, he hath left neceſſary truth plain and obvious, he will be gracious to innocent and unaffected ignorance and miſtakes; and therefore, though all may be deceived in unneceſſary points, yet none ſhall be deceived to his own hurt and ruin; except thoſe who wilfully deceive themſelves, or make it their buſineſs to pervert and diſturb others.

3. Thirdly, The next inſtance of the Scripture's profitableneſs is in correction, that is, according to the common acceptation of the word, reforming of manners. And in this indeed, conſiſts the peculiar glory of Chriſtianity, that it makes the world better, ſweetens mens tempers, purifies their hearts and affections, tames their wild paſſions, and checks thoſe exorbitancies, which render them odious to God, uneaſy to themſelves, and troubleſome to one another. We are kept in awe even from our ſecret ſins, by the conſtant preſence, and ſtrict obſervation of an all-ſeeing judge; one from whoſe thunder no covert can ſhelter, and from whoſe eye no darkneſs can hide us; one that does not only purſue us to our cloſets and beds, but unlocks our very hearts and reins, and ſees all the monſters, all the deformed race of evil thoughts and actions, even in their embryo and crude conception. Here we have vice unmasked, and ſhewn in its native deviliſhneſs; as the blackeſt and baſeſt thing in itſelf; the moſt deceitful in its appearances, the moſt deſtructive in its effects. The mother of ſorrow, and ſhame, and death, that cheats us with imaginary pleaſures of a moment, and ſatisfactions that flee from us in the very inſtant of ſnatching them; but leaves real and laſting pains behind, abandons us to all the horrors of guilt and confuſion, amazement and deſpair, ſows all the ſeeds of diſcord and diſorder, breaks all faith, cuts the bands of ſociety in ſunder, and after all the agonies of mind, pains of body, private and publick miſeries on earth, plunges men at laſt into the bottomleſs pit; a place of vengeance and fruitleſs remorſes; the gnawings of a worm that never dies, and the burnings of a flame never to be quenched. Theſe are the terrors of the Lord to perſwade men to be wiſer, and ſtupid ſure are they, whom theſe will not perſwade.

Fourthly, The Scripture is ſaid to be profitable for inſtruction in righteouſneſs, that is, the directing us how we may pleaſe, and become like unto God. To this purpoſe it preſcribes pure and holy hearts, clean hands, well-governed paſſions, a ſtrict and watchful guard againſt temptation; a mind eaſy and reſigned to providence, raiſed above the preſent world, and therefore moderate in its deſires, and reſerved in its enjoyments. It conſults the benefit of all conditions, and preſcribes virtues proper for every relation and capacity of human life. It invites to the practice of theſe, by their own lovelineſs and beauty, by the ſatisfactions they bring to our ſelves, and the benefit they are of to others.

CHAP. IV.

1 He exhorteth him to do his duty with all care and diligence, 6 Certifieth him of the nearneſs of his death, 9 Willeth him to come ſpeedily unto him, and to bring Marcus with him, and certain other things which he wrote for, 14 Warneth him to beware of Alexander the ſmith, 16 Informeth him what had befallen him at his firſt anſwering, 19 And ſoon after he concludeth.

I Charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom.

2 Preach the word, be inſtant in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-ſuffering and doctrine.

3 For the time will come when they will not endure ſound doctrine; but after their own luſts ſhall they heap to themſelves teachers, having itching ears.

4 And they ſhall turn away their ears from the truth, and ſhall be turned unto fables.

5 But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangeliſt, make full proof of thy miniſtry.

6 For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.

7 I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith.

8 Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous judge ſhall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them alſo that love his appearing.

9 Do thy diligence to come ſhortly unto me.

10 For Demas hath forſaken me, having loved this preſent world, and is departed unto Theſſalonica: Creſcens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia.

11 Only Luke is with me. Take Mark and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the miniſtry.

12 And Tychicus have I ſent to Epheſus.

13 The cloke that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comeſt, bring with thee and the books, but eſpecially the parchments.

14 Alexander the copper-ſmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works.

15 Of whom be thou ware alſo; for he hath greatly withſtood our words.

16 At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, but all men forſook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17 Notwithſtanding the Lord ſtood with me, and ſtrengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.

18 And the Lord ſhall deliver me from every evil work, and will preſerve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

19 Salute Priſca and Aquila, and the houſhold of Oneſiphorus.

20 Eraſtus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum ſick.

21 Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

22 The Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with thy ſpirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

¶ The ſecond epiſtle unto Timotheus, ordained the firſt biſhop of the church of the Epheſians, was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before Nero the ſecond time.

In this chapter the Apoſtle,

I. Excites Timothy to a diligent and vigorous preaching of the word of God, by (1.) a ſolemn charge, ver. 1. and (2) by a deſcription of this diligent preaching in the ſeveral parts and branches thereof, ver. 2. Then

He adds the reaſon of this charge, becauſe there will come a defection from the truth ; which defection he deſcribes by its cauſes, ver. 3. and by the form or eſſence, wherein it doth conſiſt, ver. 4.

He repeats the exhortation to his duty, ver. 5. eſpecially becauſe Timothy would ſoon be deprived of Paul's inſtructions for the future, the time of his departure now approaching, ver. 6. againſt which he comforts both himſelf and Timothy, by the conſideration of the ſincere diſcharge of his miniſtry, ver. 7. and of the reward he was to receive for it ; amplified by a deſcription of ſuch others, as are entitled to the ſame reward, ver-8.

II. Concludes this Epiſtle with a deſire for Timothy to come to him, ver. 9. for certain reaſons, ver. 10, 11. —— and to bring Mark with him, and the reaſons thereof, ver. —11, 12. Wiſhes him to bring certain things with him, which he had left behind, ver. 13. acquaints him with the miſchief Alexander had done him, for which he gives him a ſuitable imprecation, ver. 14. and cautions Timothy to beware of him, becauſe he oppoſed Paul, ver. 15. Gives him an account of his trial before Nero, ver. 16—18. ſends commendations to ſome perſons, ver. 19. informs him of what became of Eraſtus and Trophimus, ver. 20. importunes him to come before winter ; ſends ſalutations from all the brethren, ver. 21. and ſends him his Apoſtolical bleſſing, ver. 22.

Ver. 2. — Preach the word.] i. e. The form of ſound words, or the word of the Goſpel ; ſee ch. i. 13.

Ver. 3. —— Sound doctrine.] See 1 Tim. i. 10.

—— Itching ears.] Always thirſting after novelties, and carried away from the ſound Word of God by the inventions of deſigning men, as it follows in the next verſe.

Ver. 4. — Shall be turned unto fables.] See 1 Tim. i. 4. and iv. 7.

Ver. 5. — The work of an Evangeliſt.] Preach without reſpect of perſons ; ſee Acts xxi. 8. and Eph. iv. 11.

Ver. 7. I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith.] Theſe words run in figures taken metaphorically from the olympick games ; where there were wreſtlings, a race was to be run, and all was to be performed according to the laws of thoſe games, that were eſteemed the greateſt and nobleſt diverſions of thoſe ages : Judges were appointed to declare the victors, and to give them the prize ; they were crowned with garlands, and had very extravagant honours done them. Thoſe exerciſes being eſteemed the beſt preparations to military glory ; ſo that the world thought they could not do enough to encourage them.

According then to that ſtile, the importance of which was at that time well underſtood, Paul here comforts himſelf with this, that he had fought a good fight, or rather the good fight, which he elſewhere calls, the good fight of faith, 1 Tim. vi. 12. He had been bred up with the prejudices, and ſowred with the paſſions of the Jews, and of the Phariſees in particular ; but by the mighty hand of God he was delivered from both ; and afterwards he preached that faith which he had formerly perſecuted ; but with another ſpirit ; he ſtudied to gain the Jews with a ſpirit of meekneſs and charity ; he judged favourably of them, that they had a zeal of God, though not according to knowledge, Rom. x. 2. he prayed for them, and complied with them as far as he could, without betraying the principles and the liberty of the Chriſtian religion, 1 Cor. ix. 20. and he was willing not only to have died, but to have become an anathema or execration for them, Rom. ix. 2, 3. He was indeed reproached and perſecuted by them with all poſſible injuſtice and cruelty ; yet he was not changed or provoked by all that oppoſition : But though he became all things to all men, yet when the truth or honour of the Chriſtian religion was concerned, he gave them not place by ſubjection, (he yielded no ground to them) no not for an hour, Gal. ii. 4, 5.

He had enemies of another ſort likewiſe ; thoſe who endeavoured to corrupt the Chriſtian religion by the prophane mixtures of paganiſm and idolatry : For though he had large thoughts concerning the idol feaſts, and meats offered to idols, (1 Cor. viii.) yet he could not bear with thoſe that were the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, and that were ſtudying to cover themſelves from it, by thoſe baſe compliances with Heatheniſh practices. His oppoſing idolatry had often raiſed ſtorms againſt himſelf, that were like to have proved fatal to him, as at Lyſtra, Epheſus, and in other places, Acts xiv. and xix. yet he never gave over declaring againſt it, and warning all men to forſake thoſe vanities, and to ſerve the living God. He had alſo many falſe brethren to deal with, men that envied him, that ſtudied to diſparage his perſon, to detract from his authority, and that endeavoured to raiſe factions againſt him, 2 Cor. x. and xi. but though he was glad that Chriſt was preached, at what rate ſoever, even by theſe ſpiteful men ; and though in meekneſs he inſtructed thoſe that oppoſed themſelves, Phil. i. 18. yet when occaſion required it, he aſſerted the dignity of his character with great boldneſs, and exerted it in ſome ſevere acts of Apoſtolical juriſdiction, 1 Cor. v. 1 Tim i. 20. With all theſe diſferent ſorts of men he was engaged, and among them he fought the good fight.

He finiſhed his courſe ; he run the race that was ſet before him with patience, as he finiſhed it with joy. He was a pattern in all reſpects both in what he did, and in what he ſuffered ; in his perſonal deportment as a Chriſtian, and in his labours as an Apoſtle : He durſt make his appeals to all the Churches where he had laboured, as well as to God, who knew how holily, juſtly, and unblameably, he had behaved himſelf among them. He wrought with his own hands, to ſupport himſelf, that ſo his labours in the Goſpel might be the more ſucceſsful, and be liable to leſs exception, 1 Theſſ. ii. 10. Acts xx. 34. 1 Cor. ix. 18. He went about laying himſelf out wholly in that work, preaching in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon, and as he himſelf ſaid, publickly and from houſe to houſe, Acts xx. 18—20. yet he was all the while reviled to the degree of being eſteemed as the filth and the off ſcourings of the earth, 1 Cor. iv. 13. and we have a large catalogue given us of the impriſonments, whippings, ſtonings, and other perſecutions, through which he paſt, 2 Cor. vi. and xi His body was exhauſted with his conſtant labours ; and his zeal for all the Churches burnt him up inwardly ; ſo that without and within, his life was a continued ſcene of labour and ſufferings ; yet through all this he went, undaunted and unſhaken, and was ſo unſtained in the whole courſe of his miniſtry, that he knew he could with aſſurance appeal to what his companions in labour had obſerved of his manner of life, 2 Tim. iii. 10.

Finally, He had kept the faith, either his faith that he had plighted to God when dedicated firſt by the vow of baptiſm, and afterwards ſeparated to the work of the miniſtry by the impoſition of hands. He had been true to that faith, and to thoſe vows. Or, by the faith may be meant the purity of the Chriſtian doctrine, which he had received as a truſt from the Lord Jeſus, and had delivered it faithfully to the Churches as he had received it: Neither corrupting nor ſuppreſſing any part of it, but declaring to them the whole counſel of God, 1 Cor. xi. 23. Acts xx. 17. And though ſome through weakneſs, and others through malice, might have wreſted his words, 2 Pet. iii. 16. yet he had never handled the word of God deceitfully, nor of men ſought he glory, 2 Cor. iv. 2. He was neither aſhamed nor afraid of the croſs of Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. ii. 6. He aſſerted the great truths of religion, when he ſaw them ſtruck at, with an authority and zeal proportioned to the importance of them, 1 Cor. xv. while in leſſer matters he left men to the juſt freedoms of human nature, to be governed by thoſe great meaſures of diſcretion and charity, a care to avoid ſcandal, and to promote edification and peace, decency and order, Rom. xiv. So that it may be obſerved, that Theſe words carry in them a three-fold character of the ſtruglings and difficulties of the life and labours, and of the fidelity and ſound doctrine of this great Apoſtle : And that it was no preſumption in him to propoſe himſelf as a pattern, to be followed by others, as he was a follower of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xi. 1. while he bids them mark ſuch as they ſaw followed the example that he ſet them ; which was far from claiming any equality with his maſter.

Critical

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,

TO TITUS.

The INTRODUCTION.

Titus, as it appears by Gal. ii. 3. having been converted from Paganiſm to the Chriſtian Faith, was by Paul appointed to be an Evangeliſt and a companion in his work and voyages in the preaching of the Goſpel, and was leſt by him in Crete for to perfect the eſtabliſhing of the ſtate and government of the Churches which Paul had founded in that place, and whilſt he was there the Apoſtle writ this Epiſtle to admoniſh, incite and encourage him to the careful and diligent exerciſe of his office; and alſo to authorize him among the Cretians: Wherefore, he begins with a declaration of thoſe qualities required in thoſe perſons whom he is to chuſe for teachers in that Church, both in regard of their life, behaviour, and domeſtick government, and eſpecially in regard of their doctrine, it being a moſt neceſſary part for to oppoſe the Jewiſh falſe errors and doctrines, whereof the ſeed was already ſcattered among thoſe Churches. Then he appoints him, inſtead of vain obſervations, wherein falſe teachers repoſe great holineſs, to teach and recommend the true and ſpiritual ſanctification in every one's vocation; and eſpecially to voluntary obedience to princes and magiſtrates, according to God's Graces preſented in the Goſpel, and the regeneration of the Spirit, which he recommends as moſt efficacious for that purpoſe, and, on the contrary, adviſeth him to forbid and ſuppreſs all vain diſputations, and to ſhun all obſtinate Hereticks. And,

Now let us make the following obſervations on theſe three Epiſtles to Timothy and Titus.

1. It appears from Paul's ordaining Timothy Biſhop of Epheſus, and Titus Biſhop of Crete, as the ancients teſtify, that the government of the Church by Biſhops was an Apoſtolical Ordinance. And accordingly in theſe Epiſtles the Apoſtle gave them inſtructions concerning the government of the inferior Clergy, and the people in thoſe Churches; as for example, we read, Timothy was empowered to diſcharge the office of a Biſhop, viz. to prove and admit others to the miniſterial function, 1 Tim. iii 10. to encourage and reward them, ch. v. 17. and to exerciſe diſcipline, ch. v. 19, 20, 21. And ſo likewiſe Titus was commanded to ſet in order affairs of the Churches, and to ordain elders, Titus i. 5. See Dr. Cave's lives of Timothy and Titus. Biſhop Stillingfleet's Caſes, Edit. 2. p. 8. Biſhop Beveridge's Cordex. Can. Eccleſ. Prim. l. 2. c. 11. and Biſhop Potter's government of the ancient Church, c. 4. where alſo obſerve, that the gift of government was diſtinct from that of an Evangeliſt, 1 Cor. xii. 28. Eph. iv. 11.

2dly, That to pray to ſaints and Angels to procure their interceſſion is againſt the Apoſtle's doctrine, who has declared, That as there is but one God, ſo there is but one Mediator between God and man the man Chriſt Jeſus, 1 Tim. ii. 5. which categorically condemns that doctrine of the Papiſts, that the ſaints are to be prayed unto, becauſe God beſtows bleſſings on us for their merits and favour; ſee the Catechiſm of the Council of Trent, or, ad Parochos, pars tertia ad primum præceptum de invocatione ſanctorum, ſect. 24.

3dly, That the doctrines of purgatory, or purgation by torments, of ſuch who indeed depart this life in the faith of Chriſt, but muſt yet ſuffer, as the Papiſts teach, a temporal puniſhment, and of praying for deliverance of the deceaſed from the torments thereof, or for eaſe under them are not countenanced by Paul's charitable prayer for Oneſiphorus, whom they ſuppoſe to have been then dead, 2 Tim. i. 18. becauſe firſt it does not appear in fact that Oneſiphorus was then dead. But ſecondly, be it granted that he was dead, Paul's prayer was not for his deliverance from torment in a ſtate between death and the reſurrection, which is the ſuppoſed torment of the Popiſh purgatory, but for mercy in that day, the ſame day he had mentioned before, at ver. 12. the great day of judgment. But mercy in purgatory, if it do them any good, as Papiſts pretend, muſt be before that day.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

1 For what end Titus was left in Crete. 7 How they that are to be choſen miniſters, ought to be qualified. 11 The mouths of evil teachers to be ſtopped; and what manner of men they be.

PAUL a ſervant of God, and an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the faith of Gods elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godlineſs:

2 In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lye, promiſed before the world began;

3 But he hath in due times manifeſted his word through preaching, which is committed unto me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour:

4 To Titus mine own ſon after the common faith: Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour.

5 For this cauſe left I thee in Crete, that thou ſhouldſt ſet in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee.

6 If any be blameleſs, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accuſed of riot, or unruly.

7 For a biſhop muſt be blameleſs, as the ſteward of God; not ſelf-willed, not ſoon angry, not given to wine, no ſtriker, not given to filthy lucre;

8 But a lover of hoſpitality, a lover of good men, ſober, juſt, holy, temperate;

9 Holding faſt the faithful word, as he hath been taught, that he may be able by ſound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainſayers.

10 For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, eſpecially they of the circumciſion:

11 Whoſe mouths muſt be ſtopped, who ſubvert whole houſes, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucres ſake.

12 One of themſelves, even a prophet of their own, ſaid, The Cretians are always liars, evil beaſts, ſlow bellies.

13 This witneſs is true: wherefore rebuke them ſharply, that they may be ſound in the faith;

14 Not giving heed to Jewiſh fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth.

15 Unto the pure all things are pure; but unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled.

16 They profeſs that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.

This chapter begins with the Apoſtolical inſcription, ſhewing the perſon who writes the Epiſtle; explaining the nature, the end and means of diſcovery of that faith which he preached, ver. 1, 2, 3. declaring who he is to whom he writes; and ſaluting him by name, ver. 4. Then

The Apoſtle ſhews why he left Crete, ver. 5. and ſends Titus certain directions, firſt, in reference to ſuch who might be ordained miniſters, how they ought to behave both to the Church and in their own families, ver. 6—8. Secondly, in reference to the doctrine or faith of ſuch who were to be ordained, ver. 9—16.

Ver. 1. —— After godlineſs.] The Goſpel of Chriſt, which teacheth the way of God in piety and godlineſs.

Ver. 2. In hope.] Or, for the hope.

Ver. 3. — In due times.] Thoſe times of the Meſſiah foretold by the Prophets, when he ſhould be manifeſted in the fleſh.

Ver. 4. —— Titus, mine own ſon, after the common faith.] See 1 Tim. i. 2.

Ver. 5. — Set in order,—— and ordain elders.] See the Introduction.

—— That are wanting.] Or, left undone, when I departed.

Ver. 6. — If any be blameleſs, &c.] See the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2, &c.

Ver. 8. —— Good men.] In the original it is good things.

Ver. 9. —— The faithful word.] See 2 Tim. i. 13.

Ver. 10. —— They of the circumciſion.] They who being converted from Judaiſm, defended the neceſſity of keeping many Levitical laws, eſpecially that of circumciſion. So they were Jews by nation, and Chriſtians only by profeſſion.

Ver. 12. One of themſelves.] i. e. Of their own nation, the Cretian poet Epimenides.

Ver. 16. — Reprobate.] Or, void of judgment.

CHAP. II.

1 Directions given unto Titus, both for his doctrine and life. 9 Of the duty of ſervants, and in general of all Chriſtians.

BUT ſpeak thou the things which become ſound doctrine:

2 That the aged men be ſober, grave, temperate, ſound in faith, in charity, in patience;

3 The aged women likewiſe, that they be in behaviour as becometh holineſs, not falſe accuſers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

4 That they may teach the young women to be ſober, to love their husbands, to love their children.

5 To be diſcreet, chaſte, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blaſphemed.

6 Young men likewiſe exhort to be ſober-minded.

7 In all things ſhewing thy ſelf a pattern of good works: in doctrine ſhewing uncorruptneſs, gravity, ſincerity,

8 Sound ſpeech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be aſhamed, having no evil thing to ſay of you.

9 Exhort ſervants to be obedient unto their own maſters, and to pleaſe them well in all things; not anſwering again,

10 Not purloining, but ſhewing all good fidelity; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

11 For the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men;

12 Teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world;

13 Looking for that bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt:

14 Who gave himſelf for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

15 Theſe things ſpeak and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man deſpiſe thee.

In this chapter the Apoſtle directs Titus concerning the faithful diſcharge of his office, ſhewing him how and what he ought to teach, ver. 1—10. And then he enforces his charge, by ſhewing the grounds or conſiderations upon which all the directions both foregoing and following are urged, viz. The doctrine of the Goſpel, ver. 11—13. and the redemption and ſanctification which we obtain through the death of Chriſt.

Ver. 1.—— Sound doctrine.] See 1 Tim. i. 10. vi. 3. and 2 Tim. i. 13.

Ver. 3. —— Holineſs.] Or, holy women, who profeſs the Goſpel.

—— Falſe accuſers. Or, make-bates.

Ver. 4. — Sober.] Or, wiſe, not eaſily led away to diverſe luſts, but, as it follows, to love their husbands, &c.

Ver. 5. — That the word of God may not be blaſphemed.] Leſt the unbelievers may aſcribe the evil actions of bad Chriſtians to a depravity or deficiency of doctrine and diſcipline in the Church of Chriſt.

—— Blaſphemed.] Spoken againſt undeſervedly.

Ver. 11, 12, 13. For the grace of God, &c.] See ch. iii. 4. 1 Tim. ii. 4. Col. i. 22. 1 John ii. 16. 1 Cor. i. 7. Philip. iii. 20.

Ver. 14. — A peculiar people.] See Exod. xv. 16. and xix. 5.

CHAP. III.

1 Titus is yet further directed by Paul, both concerning the things he ſhould teach, and not teach. 10 He is willed alſo to reject obſtinate hereticks: 12 which done, he appointeth him both time and place, wherein he ſhould come unto him, and ſo concludeth.

PUT them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, to obey magiſtrates, to be ready to every good work,

2 To ſpeak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, ſhewing all meekneſs unto all men.

3 For we our ſelves alſo were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

4 But after that the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared,

5 Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghoſt;

6 Which he ſhed on us abundantly, through Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour:

7 That being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

8 This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works: theſe things are good and profitable unto men.

9 But avoid fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies, and contentions, and ſtrivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

10 A man that is an heretick, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, reject:

11 Knowing that he that is ſuch, is ſubverted, and ſinneth, being condemned of himſelf.

12 When I ſhall ſend Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter.

13 Bring Zenas the lawyer, and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them.

14 And let ours alſo learn to maintain good works for neceſſary uſes, that they be not unfruitful.

15 All that are with me ſalute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

¶ It was written to Titus ordained the firſt biſhop of the church of the Cretians, from Nicopolis of Macedonia.

In this chapter Paul teaches Timothy how to accommodate his doctrine more generally to all ſorts of Chriſtians; as to magiſtrates, and to each other in all ſtates and conditions of life, ver. 1. 2.

Theſe duties are urged by divers arguments, as their preſent condition, far different from their carnal ſtate, ver. 3—7. And from the ſingular excellency of the Goſpel-Doctrine, amplified by an exhortation to maintain it vigorouſly, ver. 8. to avoid contrary opinions, and to reject Hereticks, ver. 10, 11. and then concludes.

Ver. 1.——To be ſubject to principalities and powers, &c.] See Rom. xiii.

Ver. 2.——Speak evil of no man.] The ſin or vice of evil-ſpeaking, here forbidden by the Apoſtle, is, μεδένα-βλασφημεῖν, not to defame and ſlander any man, not to hurt his reputation, as the etymology of the word doth import. So that this vice conſiſts in ſaying things of others which tend to their diſparagement and reproach, to the taking away or leſſening of their reputation and good name. And this, whether the things ſaid be true or not. If they be falſe, and we know it, then it is downright calumny; and if we do not know it, but take it upon the report of others, it is however a ſlander; and ſo much the more injurious, becauſe really groundleſs and undeſerved.

If the thing be true, and we know it to be ſo, yet it is a defamation, and tends to the prejudice of our neighbour's reputation: And it is a fault to ſay the evil of others which is true, unleſs there be ſome good reaſon for it beſides: Becauſe it is contrary to that charity and goodneſs which Chriſtianity requires to divulge the faults of others, though they be really guilty of them, without neceſſity, or ſome other very good reaſon for it.

Again, it is evil-ſpeaking, and the vice here condemned, whether we be the firſt authors of an ill report, or relate it from others; becauſe the man that is evil ſpoken of, is equally defamed either way.

Again, whether we ſpeak evil of a man to his face, or behind his back: The former way indeed ſeems to be the more generous, but yet is a great fault, and that which we call reviling: The latter is more mean and baſe, and that which we properly call ſlander or backbiting.

And laſtly, whether it be done directly and in expreſs terms, or more obſcurely and by way of oblique inſinuation; whether by way of downright reproach, or with ſome crafty preface of commendation; for, ſo it have the effect to defame, the manner of addreſs does not much alter the caſe: The one may be more dextrous, but is not one jot leſs faulty; for, many times, the deepeſt wounds are given by theſe ſmoother and more artificial ways of ſlander; as, by asking queſtions, Have you not heard ſo and ſo of ſuch a man? I ſay no more, I only ask the queſtion: Or, by general intimations, that they are loth to ſay what they have heard of ſuch a one, are very ſorry for it, and do not at all believe it, if you will believe them: And this many times without telling the thing, but leaving you in the dark to ſuſpect the worſt.

Theſe, and ſuch like arts, though they may ſeem to be tenderer and gentler ways of uſing mens reputation, yet in truth they are the moſt malicious and effectual methods of ſlander; becauſe they inſinuate ſomething that is much worſe than is ſaid, and yet are very apt to create in unwary men a ſtrong belief of ſomething that is very bad, though they know not what it is. So that it matters not in what faſhion a ſlander is dreſſed up, if it tend to defame a man, and to diminiſh his reputation, it is the ſin forbidden in this text. Yet,

We are not here abſolutely forbid to ſay any thing concerning others that is bad. This, in ſome caſes, may be neceſſary and our duty, and in ſeveral caſes very fit and reaſonable. The queſtion is, in what caſes, by the general rules of Scripture and right reaſon, we are warranted to ſay the evil of others that is true?

In general, we are not to do this without great reaſon and neceſſity; as, for the prevention of ſome great evil, or the procuring of ſome conſiderable good to our ſelves, or others. And this I take to be the meaning of that advice of the ſon of Sirach, whether it be to a friend or a foe, talk not of other men's lives; and if thou canſt without offence reveal them not, Eccluſ. xix. 8. that is, if without hurt to any body thou canſt conceal them, divulge them not.

But becauſe this may not be direction ſufficient, I ſhall inſtance in ſome of the principal caſes wherein men are warranted to ſpeak evil of others, and yet in ſo doing do not offend againſt this prohibition in the text.

Firſt, It is not only lawful, but very commendable, and many times our duty to do this, in order to the probable amendment of the perſon of whom evil is ſpoken. In ſuch a caſe, we may tell a man of his faults privately; or, where it may not be ſo fit for us to uſe that boldneſs and freedom, we may reveal his faults to one who is more fit and proper to reprove him, and will probably make no other uſe of this diſcovery but in order to his amendment. And this is ſo far from being a breach of charity, that it is one of the beſt teſtimonies of it. For, perhaps the party may not be guilty of what hath been reported of him, and then it is a kindneſs to give him the opportunity of vindicating himſelf; or, if he be guilty, perhaps, being privately told of it, he may reform. In this caſe, the ſon of Sirach adviſeth to reveal mens faults, Admoniſh a friend, ſays he, it may be he hath not done it, and if he have done it, that he do it no more: Admoniſh a friend, it may be he hath not ſaid it, and if he have, that he ſpeak it not again: Admoniſh a friend, for many times it is a ſlander; and believe not every tale, Eccluſ. xix. 13, 14, 15.

But then we muſt take care that this be done out of kindneſs, and that nothing of our own paſſion be mingled with it; and that under pretence of reproving and reforming men we do not reproach and revile them, and tell them of their faults in ſuch a manner as if we did it to ſhew our authority rather than our charity. It requires a great deal of addreſs and gentle application ſo to manage the buſineſs of reproof, as not to irritate and exaſperate the perſon whom we reprove, inſtead of curing him.

Secondly, This likewiſe is not only lawful, but our duty, when we are legally called to bear witneſs concerning the fault and crime of another. A good man would not be an accuſer, unleſs the publick good, or the prevention of ſome great evil ſhould require it.

But when a man is called to give teſtimony in this kind, in obedience to the laws, and out of reverence to the oath taken in ſuch caſes, he is ſo far from deſerving blame for ſo doing, that it would be an unpardonable fault in him to conceal the truth, or any part of it.

Thirdly, It is lawful to publiſh the faults of others, in our own neceſſary defence and vindication. When a man cannot conceal another's faults without betraying his own innocency, no charity requires a man to ſuffer himſelf to be defamed to ſave the reputation of another man. Charity begins at home, and though a man had never ſo much goodneſs, he would firſt ſecure his own good name, and then be concerned for other mens. We are to love our neighbour as our ſelves; ſo that the love of our ſelves is the rule and meaſure of our love to our neighbour: And therefore firſt, otherwiſe it could not be rule. And it would be very well for the world, if our charity would riſe thus high; and no man would hurt another man's reputation, but where his own is in real danger.

Fourthly, This alſo is lawful for caution and warning to a third perſon, that is in danger to be infected by the company, or ill example of another; or may be greatly prejudiced by repoſing too much confidence in him, having no knowledge or ſuſpicion of his bad qualities: But even in this caſe we ought to take great care that the ill character we give of any man be ſpread no further than is neceſſary to the good end we deſigned in it.

Beſides, theſe more obvious and remarkable caſes, this prohibition doth not, I think, hinder but that in ordinary converſation men may mention that ill of others which is already made as publick as it well can be: Or, that one friend may not in freedom ſpeak to another of the miſcarriage of a third perſon, where he is ſecure no ill uſe will be made of it, and that it will go no further to his prejudice:

dice: Provided always, that we take no delight in hearing or ſpeaking ill of others: And the leſs we do it, though without any malice or deſign of harm, ſtill the better; becauſe this ſhews that we do not feed upon ill reports, and take pleaſure in them.

Theſe are the uſual caſes in which it may be neceſſary for us to ſpeak evil of other men. And theſe are ſo evidently reaſonable that the prohibition in the text cannot with reaſon be extended to them. And if no man would allow himſelf to ſay any thing to the prejudice of another man's good name, but in theſe and the like caſes, the tongues of men would be very innocent, and the world be very quiet.

Ver. 6. — Which he ſhed abundantly.] See Acts ii. 33.

Ver. 9. — Avoid fooliſh queſtions and genealogies, &c.] See 1 Tim. i. 4. and 2 Tim. ii. 23. and the annotations on the following verſes.

Ver. 10, 11. A man that is an heretick, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, reject, &c.] If one look back to verſe 9th, we ſhall find that the precept mentioned therein was, as that in theſe two verſes are, calculated to reduce the Chriſtian brethren to live together in unity; for that precept in the ninth verſe relates to the idle diſputes, which were maintained by the philoſophizing and judaizing Chriſtians, who retained a taint of their old principles, and propoſed queſtions, as material points, to be diſcuſſed among Chriſtians, which in no wiſe concerned them; or, were for looking back to the other inſtituted religion, teaching the uſe of genealogical tables, in order to ſettle the ſacerdotal line, &c. and of circumciſion, which, the Pagan ſuperſtition, and Moſaick inſtitution being aboliſhed, were fooliſh, and only tended to diſcord and wrangles; from whence as the ſame Apoſtle to Timothy writes, came envy, ſtriſe, railings, evil ſurmizing, and conſequently, a diſſolution of the band of moral unity. And,

The precept in this tenth verſe appears to be deſigned againſt thoſe, who would not ſubmit to the forms of the Church preſcribed by the Apoſtle, but chuſing tenets of their own invention ſet up new forms, endeavoured to make ſects and parties in the Church of Chriſt, and ſo broke the band of eccleſiaſtical unity. Therefore,

We will ſuppoſe, I hope juſtly, that we ſhould paraphraſe the text in this manner, "Encourage not thoſe who are of a diſputatious temper, who would argue about nice and vain punctilios, whether of Gentile or Jewiſh original, which lead to no good, but tend to endleſs contention and confuſion, clamour and noiſe: And as to an heretick, let him neither raiſe endleſs diſputes among the brethren; but after he has been once and again admoniſhed, declare him a perſon not to be acknowledged of the Chriſtian ſociety, or of common and familiar converſe."

This interpretation ſeems to be moſt juſt, as the term κατακρίνειν, from whence comes the word in the original, which is rendered ſelf-condemned, generally ſignifies to paſs ſentence as a judge, who inflicts a puniſhment; ſo that the word ἀυτοκατάκριτος, condemned of himſelf, muſt be ill uſed, when it is taken barely to ſignify one, who finds himſelf guilty, and is ſelf-conſcious, that he does wrong, ſince it ſhould imply ſomething further, an infliction of puniſhment for ſo doing. And then the word ſtands as an elegance in the paſſage, which is not uncommon with Paul, meaning not, that he formally inflicts a puniſhment, as ſuch, upon himſelf; but that by his ſin and folly in ſeparation, he, by his own voluntary act, puts himſelf under ſuch circumſtances, as the Church would lay him under by its penalty. For which interpretation

I refer the reader to the 69th and 74th Epiſtles of Cyprian, to Dr. Hammond upon the place, to Hooker's Sermon on Jude, to Dr. Rogers's 7th chapter of his review, where he will find that the heretick, who is ἀυτοκατάκριτος is explained to be one, who is condemned, not purely by own conſcience, but by his external behaviour and practice. But as it may be queried, Who are hereticks?

I ſhall conſider what ſort of perſons fall under the denomination of hereticks, in a proper, Apoſtolical, and Chriſtian ſenſe. It is fit to add in the Chriſtian ſenſe, becauſe it doth not much conduce to this point, how the word hereſy was uſed by Pagan writers: It is no doubt, by them uſed in a general ſenſe to denote a ſect or party.

Again, ſhould the word in Scripture come in the mouth of a Gentile, as of the Roman orator Tertullus ſpeaking, Acts xxiv. 5. it neither can be of any conſequence to determine the Apoſtolical ſenſe of it, properly ſo called.

But when it was aſſumed by the Jew towards a Chriſtian convert, apprehending him to have imbibed tenets, which were not according to the Moſaick inſtitution, and drawing followers after him, it ſeems to contain an idea nearer the true notion of hereſy in the text, and implies a diviſion made in that ſociety, which the Jew believes to be the true Church of God; as in Acts xxviii. 22. But we deſire to hear of thee what thou thinkeſt; for as concerning this ſect, we know, that it is every where ſpoken againſt, i. e. by their brethren the Jews; as there were ſome ſects, which were not ſo odious amongſt them, if we may judge by Paul's plea for himſelf, Acts xxvi. 4, 5. But yet, as they had ſeveral ſects and hereſies amongſt them, which were not excluded from the general ſociety, the body of Moſes; it admits here a more lax ſenſe, than the Apoſtolick hereſy will bear. And ſo it ſtands, Acts xxiv. 14. After the way, which they call hereſy, ſo worſhip I the God of my fathers.

The only method then to attain to the true and full ſenſe of the word hereſy in the Chriſtian acceptation, is to weigh it well, and examine it thoroughly, when aſſumed by the perſons of the Sacred Writers towards thoſe who made factions and diviſions in the Chriſtian ſociety, and broke aſunder the Catholick unity. It is repreſented by the Apoſtle to the Corinthians as the moſt ſcandalous enormity. For I praiſe you not, ſays he, that you come together, not for the better, but for the worſe. For firſt of all, when ye come together in the Church, I hear, that there are diviſions among you, and I partly believe it. For there muſt alſo be hereſies among you, that they, which are approved, may be made manifeſt. That is, "it is no wonder to me, though it is a ſhame for you, that diſſentions and diviſions ſubſiſt among you of a leſſer kind; for the Church muſt be expoſed to much greater evils, even to enormous hereſies, which however will have ſome conſequential good, the diſtinction and manifeſtation of the ſincere and faithful Chriſtian."

There are indeed thoſe who ſuppoſe diviſions and hereſies in this place to be equivalent: But this enervates the ſenſe, takes off the ſtrength of the reaſoning particle, injures the paſſage, by robbing it of its beauty and force, agrees not with the uſual ſpirit of Paul, and correſponds not ſo well with the propheſies mentioned by Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 1. and Jude to the ſame effect, Jude 17. Beſides, this expoſition is irrefragably proved by another paſſage of the ſame Apoſtle in his Epiſtle to the Galatians: Where amongſt the works of the fleſh are enumerated ſeditions and hereſies, of which ſeditions are of equal ſignification with diviſions in the other place, and being here diſtinguiſhed from hereſies, it follows, that the ſame diſtinction is good in both places. As the term occurs here or there, it denotes a high indecency, a grievous ſin, an aggravated crime, and ſuch as excludes from the kingdom of Heaven.

And this ſenſe it retains, when uſed by Peter in his 2d Epiſt. ch. ii. 1. But there were falſe prophets alſo among the people, even as there ſhall be falſe teachers among you, who ſhall privily bring in damnable hereſies.

It hardly occurs again in the New Teſtament ſo uſed, but in the concrete, as we ſay (that is the word, denoting the evil quality with the ſubject) we find it in this Epiſtle to Titus, an heretical man, or heretick. The paſſage contains a deſcription which conſtitutes this character, which ſubjected the offender to a grievous penalty; and if it was a crime then, it is equally ſo now. So that

The heretick is in ſhort one, who profeſſing Chriſt, holds and maintains tenets, contrary to the Chriſtian faith, obſtinately adhering to them, when the truth has been duly offered; or who denies thoſe articles, which are agreeable to it. He is diſtinguiſhed from the Infidel, in that the Infidel doth not hold the principal, and grand, fundamental truth, believing not in the name of the Lord Jeſus: From the true believer, in that, though the heretick aſſents to Chriſt, yet doth he not conform himſelf to the obedience of faith in thoſe things, which are delivered by him, concerning his perſon and doctrine, and ſo by conſequence denies him.

Such a perſon is well characterized by the Apoſtle to Titus. For he is ſubverted, i. e. He is turned from the foundation of the faith; though he may acknowledge Jeſus Chriſt, yet he denies him to be what he is; though he calls him Lord, yet he believes not the things, which he teaches; and whilſt he rejects his doctrine, the ſuperſtructure, in effect, deſerts its foundation. For inſtance, the Ebionites profeſſed a belief in Chriſt Jeſus; but held, that he was begotten of Joſeph; the Photinians, that he was only from the Virgin Mary. This is to deny him to be the Son of God; and if ſo, then the Son of God did not ſuffer, and ſo it will follow of the other articles. Thus, whilſt they acknowledged the author of our religion, their tenets implied a denial of all the articles of the faith he taught, which is by conſequence to deny his perſon.

Further he ſinneth, viz. in that he is ſo ſubverted. Now to be ſubverted ſuppoſes, that he has been built up in Jeſus Chriſt, otherwiſe he could not fall from what he never was. So for inſtance the diſciples at Epheſus, mentioned Acts the xlixth, were not hereticks, though they believed not the Holy Ghoſt, as we find it related. And he ſaid unto them, have ye received the Holy Ghoſt; and they ſaid, we have not ſo much as heard, whether there be any Holy Ghoſt. In this caſe, they could not chuſe a falſe opinion about that, of which they had not heard. But when men have been ſufficiently inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith, and received into the Church by baptiſm, then whoſoever corrupts it in any fundamental point, or ſo rejects it, is properly ſubverted and ſinneth. He ſins, in that he rejects, what he has vowed to maintain and believe.

But then ſuppoſe he errs about what he vowed to believe; and is ſincerely perſwaded, that the tenet, which he eſpouſes contrary to the Catholick faith, is true: Suppoſe it to be an error of the underſtanding, and not of the will, which alone, ſome ſay, is hereſy, which muſt be wilful, otherwiſe not ſin.

To this I obſerve, that hereſy may be an error, both of the underſtanding and the will: For circumſtances may make an error of the underſtanding ſinful. A pride in, and conceit of our own parts, may make us neglect the offered means of knowledge; this neglect may cauſe an error in the underſtanding; this error in the underſtanding may determine the will to embrace a depraved opinion in fundamentals, this depraved opinion is hereſy, and this hereſy is ſin. For, the end of the commandment, ſays the Apoſtle, is charity out of a pure heart, and a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned. From which ſome having ſwerved have turned aſide unto vain janglings. Deſiring to be teachers of the law, underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm. Theſe teachers it ſeems leaned to their own underſtanding, their underſtanding was erroneous, their error was ſuch, as made them ſwerve from the faith, and he who ſwerves from the faith by an error, ſo contracted, ſinneth, and ſo may be an heretick. So that we ſee every error in the underſtanding will not render an heretical depravity of mind unſinful.

Nay, no error in the underſtanding will render an heretical depravity of mind perfectly ſinleſs. For, according to Dr. Scot, in Ser. on 1 John iii. 7. Now Chriſtianity has been made known, and ſufficiently propoſed to us, we cannot be good men, unleſs we do believe it: And we cannot believe it, unleſs we embrace the neceſſary credenda, the eſſentials of the Chriſtian faith. Every obliquity and want of rectitude in the thought, has the taint of ſin, though it is owing to infirmity. And in this particular caſe the truth muſt be offered, otherwiſe it cannot be rejected: And if it is rejected, the will muſt have its part in that act, ſo that it is in ſome ſenſe heretical: For in ſo doing, we chuſe an opinion, contrary to the truth, propoſed by the Church from the Scripture. In this choice we actually tranſgreſs the law of Chriſt, who has commanded us to believe in him and his words. And ſin, we know, is a tranſgreſſion of the law. If this is done through ignorance, or pure miſapprehenſion, that will not put us in the ſtate of thoſe, who are obſervers of his law, though it may in different meaſures and degrees leave us the ſubjects of the Divine Mercy and clemency. It may put thoſe, who contend earneſtly againſt the faith, and are ſincere in their error, in the caſe of Paul, when he was a ſincere perſecutor and blaſphemer, who was therein not ſinleſs, but the object of mercy. But I obtained mercy, ſays he, becauſe I did it ignorantly in unbelief. And mercy ſhewn and diſplayed, ſuppoſes an offence or ſin to be forgiven. It may leave them capable of the grace of God here to call them to the acknowledgment of the truth, or (if they uſe their utmoſt endeavours) of uncovenanted mercies hereafter, but that it will neceſſarily recommend them to the Divine Favours, is bold for vain man to utter. So that ſuch perſons, how ſincere ſoever they may think themſelves, come under the ſecond characteriſtick of the heretick, he ſinneth, and ſo may be hereticks.

And this is no inconſiſtency with the third characteriſtick, being condemned of himſelf; ſee the meaning of theſe words before. They ſignify, that hereticks act an abſurdity, that they profeſs Chriſt, but deny that profeſſion by their actions. And ſo the judicious Hooker explains the word, ἀυτοκατακρίτοι, not judged by us, but by their own doings. They may poſſibly imagine themſelves right, and yet be ſo condemned. For if they profeſs Jeſus Chriſt, and maintain and endeavour to propagate opinions, contrary to his doctrines, whatſoever they may think of thoſe opinions through errors, contracted by ſins of any kind, deluſions of Satan or infirmities, they plainly blaſpheme that name, which they profeſs to acknowledge; and by their inconſiſtency with themſelves, are condemned of themſelves: Which is an act, by which they lay themſelves under that penalty, in which the Church would have condemned them. For they ſeparate themſelves. Thus being ſubverted from the faith, having once embraced it, they may therein ſin, though ſincere in their deluſion, and be ſelf-condemned: Which particulars complete the character of the Apoſtle's heretick. And,

According to his account, hereſies are the works of the fleſh; and as the fleſh works differently in different perſons, according to its various workings, we may aſſign divers cauſes of them. And according to theſe cauſes their eſpouſers hold and maintain tenets, either directly againſt the light and conviction of their minds, or elſe thro' deluſion wander in mazes of error and darkneſs.

One principle of thoſe, who, in the time of primitive Chriſtianity, embraced the Goſpel for gain, and to make a prey of the promiſes, was concupiſcence, the love of the world, and the luſts of the fleſh. It was indeed abſurd to renounce the world, that they might embrace it; but ſuch were the firſt corrupters of the Chriſtian doctrines, Simon Magus, and his followers, and the Nicholaitanes, who infected the Church in the firſt ages, were oppoſed in their blaſphemies by the Apoſtles themſelves, and could not therefore be ſincere, but muſt act againſt their conſciences, in that they minted doctrines, which the Apoſtles, who were commiſſioned to deliver the Goſpel, rejected and anathematized. Of theſe, whether Gnoſticks, or others, the Apoſtle to Timothy ſpeaks: For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while ſome coveted after, they have erred from the faith. And the ſpirit ſays in the Rev. of the doctrine of the Nicholaitanes, which thing I hate.

Another principle there was, which tended to propagate hereſy in the Scripture times, the pride of thoſe, who, like Diotrephes, deſired the preheminence, who affected to domineer, to be leaders of ſects and parties, and teachers of new-fangled doctrines, ſuch were Hymeneus and Philetus, and thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks in the Coloſſians, ch. ii. 18. Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility, and worſhipping of Angels, intruding into thoſe things which he hath not ſeen, vainly puft up by his fleſhly mind.

A further means, by which men corrupted the doctrine of Chriſtianity, was by yielding to phantaſtical deluſions, and ſatanical ſeductions, the ſeductions of that ſpirit, which, as the Apoſtle to the Epheſians ſays, now worketh in the children of diſobedience? Among whom we all had our converſation in times paſt in the luſts of the fleſh, and of the mind. The ſpiritual following the ſuggeſtions of the ſenſual part. Concerning theſe Paul ſays to Timothy: Now the ſpirit ſpeaketh expreſly, that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils.

The laſt claſs of Hereticks are ſuch, who deceive themſelves, whoſe underſtandings are darkned, that they do not diſcern the truth, either through natural corruption, or judicial ſtupidity, which they indolently acquieſce in, of whom the Apoſtle ſays, ſeeing ye are dull of hearing: Or, elſe they are ſuch, whoſe minds may be clouded with the fumes of riot and intemperance: To whom are applicable thoſe words of the Prophet Iſaiah xxviii. 10. But they alſo have erred through wine, and through ſtrong drink are out of the way, the prieſt and the Prophet have erred through ſtrong drink; they are ſwallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through ſtrong drink, they err in viſion, they ſtumble in judgment. Of this ſort alſo Peter ſpeaks. But theſe ſpeak evil of the things, which they underſtand not, and ſhall utterly periſh in their own corruptions —ſporting themſelves in their own deceivings.— And theſe, he ſays, are of them, who walk after the fleſh.

Thoſe under the two firſt claſſes, who, through concupiſcence or pride, oppugn the Chriſtian doctrines, muſt needs ſin againſt the light of their own minds, and the conviction of their conſciences: But thoſe under the latter, may not know themſelves to be wrong, being impoſed upon by the deluſions of Satan, the vanity of their minds, the deceitfulneſs of ſin, and ſo may not act againſt their knowledge. But yet they ſin in giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, in acquieſcing indolently in error, and in yielding to carnal ſuggeſtions, through which they deceive themſelves and deſert the Chriſtian doctrines. So that they are ſubverted, and ſin therein, and therefore may be Hereticks.

Hence we obſerve, that a perſon may be an Heretick, though he doth embrace an opinion, knowing it to be wrong. And yet the vulgar apprehend this to be ſincere perſuaſion. They are apt to call the erroneous man ſincere, who knows no better: Whereas he is not ſincere, if it is in his power to know better. And as to invincible error, it is founded in original corruption, is an appendant of the fleſh, which clogs the mind, and wreſts it aſide, and though under it a man may be called ſincere, he is not therefore a Chriſtian. His ſincerity may plead for him as a man, but it will not conſtitute him a member of Chriſt. And how ſuch an one may be ſtiled an Heretick, who holds an error, though invincible, which may affect the unity, and peace, and order of the Church, has been, and is very well explained in that excellent Diſſertation on Hereſy, publiſhed by the Reverend Mr. Tipping Silveſter, M. A.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,

TO PHILEMON.

The INTRODUCTION.

This Philemon is reported by Hammond on the Title to this Epiſtle, to have been a conſiderable perſon at Coloſs. He had probably been converted by Paul, as may be probably conjectured from ver. 19. And,

The occaſion of this Epiſtle appears to be plainly a requeſt to Philemon to receive, forgive, and to entertain once more his ſervant Oneſimus, who being now become a Chriſtian, was expected to prove himſelf more faithful and diligent than before.

The caſe was this: Philemon had a ſervant named Oneſimus, who ran away from his maſter, and in his ramble had travelled as far as Rome, where he embraced the faith of Chriſt at the preaching of Paul then a priſoner for the ſame in that city; which is the meaning of the 10th verſe, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Paul therefore, being acquainted with Oneſimus's crime of elopement from his maſter's ſervice, and being alſo acquainted with Philemon, who was a Chriſtian, in full and ſure confidence, that the ſervant firmly repented of his fault, and reſolved to recompenſe his maſter by his future diligence and fidelity, writes this Epiſtle, and ſends him therewith to his maſter Philemon; wherein he begins with his joy to hear that Philemon not only perſiſted in the faith of Chriſt, but alſo that he ſhewed forth the good effect thereof by his charitable refreſhing the poor Chriſtians. And then proceeds to the chief deſign, as above.

In which Epiſtle let us make theſe reflections: It is an Apoſtolical practice to embrace an opportunity of doing good to all men. For, how careful was Paul, firſt to convert this vagabond ſervant, and then undertake to reſtore him to his maſter's favour. And hence alſo,

Let it be obſerved, that it is the duty of maſters to forgive and to be reconciled to an injurious and negligent ſervant, on his repentance, ſubmiſſion and reformation.

4 He rejoiceth to hear of the faith and love of Philemon, 9 whom he deſireth to forgive his ſervant Oneſimus, and lovingly to receive him again.

PAUL a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer.

2 And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-ſoldier, and to the church in thy houſe:

3 Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

4 I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers.

5 Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou haſt toward the Lord Jeſus, and toward all ſaints.

6 That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Chriſt Jeſus.

7 For we have great joy and conſolation in thy love, becauſe the bowels of the ſaints are refreſhed by thee, brother.

8 Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Chriſt, to enjoin thee that which is convenient.

9 Yet for loves ſake I rather beſeech thee, being ſuch a one as Paul the aged, and now alſo a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt.

10 I beſeech thee for my ſon Oneſimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds:

11 Which in time was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

12 Whom I have ſent again: thou therefore receive him that is mine own bowels.

13 Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy ſtead he might have miniſtred unto me in the bonds of the goſpel.

14 But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit ſhould not be as it were of neceſſity, but willingly.

15 For perhaps he therefore departed for a ſeaſon, that thou ſhouldſt receive him for ever;

16 Not now as a ſervant, but above a ſervant, a brother beloved, ſpecially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the fleſh, and in the Lord?

17 If thou count me therefore a partner, receive him as my ſelf.

18 If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account.

19 I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not ſay to thee, how thou oweſt unto me even thine own ſelf beſides.

20 Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refreſh my bowels in the Lord.

21 Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt alſo do more than I ſay.

22 But withal prepare me alſo a lodging: for I truſt that through your prayers I ſhall be given unto you.

23 There ſalute thee Epaphras my fellow-priſoner in Chriſt Jeſus;

24 Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers.

25 The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen.

¶ Written from Rome to Philemon, by Oneſimus a ſervant.

In this Epiſtle after the inſcription and ſalutation, ver. 1—3. there follows,

I. An Introduction or Preface, containing Paul's expreſſion of his great affection to Philemon, ver. 4—7

II. The ſubſtance of the Epiſtle; wherein he aſſerts his power to enjoin him, ver. 8. but waves that and makes uſe only of his love; enforced by two motives, his age and impriſonment, to induce him to grant his requeſt, ver. 9. Then,

He propoſes the matter of his requeſt,

(1.) More generally, in the behalf of Oneſimus, becauſe he was now a convert to Chriſt, ver. 10. and would prove a better ſervant, ver. 11.

(2.) More particularly, to receive him, enforced by ſix arguments, the firſt is in ver. 12—14. The ſecond in ver. 15, 16. The third in ver. 17. The fourth in ver. 18, 19. The fifth in ver. 20. And the ſixth in ver. 21. So,

The Apoſtle concludes with his requeſt, and the reaſon, ver. 22. with ſalutations from diverſe brethren to him, ver. 23, 24. and with his Apoſtolical benediction, ver. 25.

Ver. 1. —— A priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt.] A priſoner at Rome for the ſake of Chriſt and of his Goſpel.

—— Fellow-labourer.] In the vineyard of Chriſt.

Ver. 2. —— Our fellow-ſoldier.] In the Chriſtian warfare.

—— The Church in thy houſe.] Thoſe Chriſtians, who aſſembled in the houſe of Philemon for publick worſhip.

Ver. 9. — Now alſo a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt.] See ver. 1.

Ver. 10. — My ſon Oneſimus.] See the Introduction, and Coloſſ. iv. 9.

Ver. 12. —— Mine own bowels.] i. e. Whom I eſteem as mine own tender and beloved child.

Ver. 13. — In the bonds of the Goſpel.] In thoſe bonds which I bear, becauſe I have preached the Goſpel of truth, or faith in Chriſt.

Ver. 14. —— Thy benefit.] Or, The favour granted to me on ſuch an occaſion.

—— Of neceſſity.] Granted, when it was not in thy power to hinder or deny it.

—— But willingly.] When of thine own free-will thou ſhouldſt ſend him back to miniſter unto me.

Ver. 17. —— A partner.] In the grace of God, and office of his ſervice.

Ver. 20. — Refreſh my bowels in the Lord.] Increaſe my joy.

Ver. 22. — Through your prayers.] Shewing not only that the prayers of the righteous avail much, as the Apoſtle James vouched, but that it was the practice of the Apoſtolick age, and the duty of believers to pray for the ſafety of their teachers.

——— Given.] Reſtored.

Ver. 23. — Fellow-priſoner in Chriſt Jeſus.] i. e. My partner in the faith of Chriſt, for which I being a priſoner, he choſes to ſtay with me in my bonds.

Ver. 24. —— My fellow-labourers.] See ver. 1.

Ver. 25. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit.] See 2 Tim. iv. 22.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,

TO THE HEBREWS.

The INTRODUCTION.

The author of this Epiſtle was Paul, as the moſt ancient fathers declare, he doth not indeed begin with his name, as in other Epiſtles, Paul an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, as it is ſuppoſed, for this reaſon, becauſe he was made an Apoſtle; not ſo much of the circumciſion, that is, of the Jews, to whom this Epiſtle was ſent, as of the Gentiles, who were moſt properly his charge, Acts xxii. 21. Rom. xi. 13. Again, in chap. xiii. of this Epiſtle, ver. 18. to the end, we read that the author had Timothy for his companion, and wrote from Italy, and intreated the Hebrews to pray for him, that he might be reſtored to them the ſooner; all which moſt agrees with Paul's circumſtances, and manner of writing; for which ſee Philemon, ver. 1. Rom. xv. 30, 31. 2 Theſſ. iii. 1.

Laſtly, In the ſore-mentioned chap. xiii. of this Epiſtle, he calls Timothy our brother Timothy, as it was cuſtomary with Paul to call him, when he wrote to others, 2 Cor. i. 1. Col. i. 1.

By the Hebrews, are probably meant in this place, thoſe of the Jewiſh people who had embraced the faith of Chriſt, and lived in or near their own country Judea, many of theſe were in danger of falling away from the faith on a two-fold account, either firſt, being ſtaggered by the arguments of the unbelieving Jews, who were zealous for the law of Moſes, and maintained the excellency and neceſſity of the old legal inſtitutions and ſacrifices, which had been at firſt appointed by God, who had wrought ſo many miracles among them, and ſent ſo many Prophets to direct and encourage the obſervation of thoſe very ordinances, and that for ſo many ages paſt; or, ſecondly, becauſe, whatever Jews were converted to Chriſtianity, they were moſt bitterly perſecuted, through the aſſiſtance or connivance of the Roman power, by their unbelieving brethren or countrymen; ſee the Introduction to the Acts of the Apoſtles, and 1 Theſſ. ii. 14, 15. inſomuch, that ſome had already forſaken the Chriſtian publick aſſemblies, Heb. x. 25. Now, This being the caſe, the Apoſtle labours to keep them ſteady in their Chriſtian profeſſion, to which purpoſe from the beginning to ver. 14. of the ivth chapter, he ſets forth the excellency of Chriſt, as to his nature, he being the Son of God, and far above Angels, according to the Prophecy in the Book of Pſalms, concerning him, that the account which his Apoſtles gave of him, was ſufficiently proved and confirmed by ſigns and wonders, and divers miracles, wrought by them in confirmation of their doctrine; that he took on him the nature of man in the ſeed of Abraham, that ſo by ſuffering death himſelf, he might, through the value of his precious blood, both make void the deſign of the Devil, to keep men under the power of eternal death, and alſo by ſufferings to be made like unto us, and be thereby the more inclined, and the better qualified to compaſſionate and ſuccour us, that he was more excellent than Moſes, who indeed was faithful, yet was but like a ſervant in another's houſe; and though Joſhua gave the Iſraelites reſt in Canaan, yet the reſt which Chriſt gives in Heaven is far more excellent, which we ſhould therefore labour to enter into.

In chapter iv. 14. to the ixth chapter, he ſhews the excellency of Chriſt's prieſthood, particularly, that in him two famous Prophecies in the Book of Pſalms are fulfilled, viz. Pſ. ii. 7. Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee, (by raiſing him from the dead, in order to be an heavenly prieſt and king, as Acts xiii. 33.) The ſecond Prophecy is Pſal. cx. 4. (wherein is a confirmation by an oath) The Lord hath ſworn, and will not repent, thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedeck. Aaron's prieſthood had its beginning in Moſes's law and the prieſt, after his order, died, and wanted others to ſucceed them; but our Lord is the only prieſt after the order of Melchiſedeck; that is, a prieſt who had no ordination from man, and alſo who never ſhall die or want a ſucceſſor, but continues for ever (as there is no account given of Melchiſedeck's father, deſcent, or poſterity, nor of any beginning or end, or ſucceſſion in his office, as is of the prieſts under the law.) And further, as Melchiſedeck was a king and prieſt too, as was uſual in the firſt ages of the world, ſo Chriſt a king as well as a prieſt, hath full power for ever to bleſs all his Church; and ſince God dealt with their father Abraham, not only by promiſe, but an oath, Gen. xxii. 16, 17. in like manner, we have an aſſurance by both thoſe immutable things, a promiſe and an oath, of Chriſt's eternal prieſthood; not after the order of Aaron, and of the tribe of Levi, but after the order of Melchiſedeck. Now, if perfection were by the Levitical prieſthood, as it was in the law, what farther need was there, that another prieſt ſhould riſe after the order of Melchiſedeck, as it muſt be by virtue of the ancient Prophecy: And this change of the prieſthood, from Aaron to Melchiſedeck, argues a change alſo of the law. And, which is farther to be conſidered, prieſts indeed received tithes of their brethren; but ſo great a prieſt was Melchiſedeck, the type of Chriſt, that even the patriarch Abraham (and ſo Levi, as being in his loins) paid him tithes and received a bleſſing from him, and ſure the leſs is bleſſed of the greater. Again, the Apoſtle argues that the Levitical prieſts, to offer up ſacrifice for, but is the holy and undefiled Son of God; who having made one ſufficient offering for ſins, is ſet on the right hand of the throne of his majeſty in the Heavens; and not only ſo, but Chriſt is a mediator of a better covenant than Moſes could be under the law (according to the Prophecy of Jeremiah xxxi. 31, &c.) not on the performance of an outward ceremonial, but an inward true righteouſneſs, which by his grace he would work in their hearts.

Then as for ſacrifices, ch. ix, x. That ſacrifice of himſelf, which Chriſt offered on the croſs was more effectual by far, than all the oblations and ſacrifices appointed by the law of Moſes. Aaron indeed, once a year, entred into the holy of holies in the tabernacle on earth; but that was only a ſhadow of Heaven, in which Chriſt our high-prieſt is entred, to make interceſſion for us; ſo alſo the gifts and ſacrifices under the law were as types and figures, and ſhadows, to ſignify Chriſt the great and true ſacrifice; and thoſe legal typical ſacrifices of the blood of bulls and goats, &c. cleanſed them indeed from legal pollutions, that is, the defilements by their eating unclean meats, or neglecting ſuch and ſuch waſhings, &c. but could not of themſelves make attonement for, or take away the guilt of ſins, ſo as that no farther ſacrifice ſhould be needful, that was done by the precious blood of Chriſt, the eternal Son of God; and therefore they ought to keep ſtedfaſt to the Chriſtian faith, otherwiſe the danger would be great, even to their utter deſtruction. Therefore,

The Apoſtle mentions this dangerous effect of apoſtacy twice; firſt in ch. vi. 4, 5, 6. where he tells them, it would be impoſſible to renew them again to repentance, if after having been enlightned, (i. e. inſtructed in the knowledge of Chriſt, then baptized, and afterwards illuminated by the Divine Spirit, as is often recorded of converts in the Acts of the Apoſtles) they ſhould now deſignedly and out of a perverſe hatred of Chriſt and his Goſpel caſt off their holy religion, and ſo become apoſtates from Chriſtianity, and fall back to Judaiſm; whereby they would reſiſt all the evidence that God deſigned or could be offered for their conviction; and crucify the Son of God afreſh and put him to an open ſhame; the caſting off the Chriſtian Religion being as a confeſſion, that Chriſt was juſtly crucified. The like dangerous effects of apoſtacy the Apoſtle repeats ch. x. 26, &c. aſſuring them there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, for all ſuch who ſhould diſown or ſlight the blood of Chriſt, and the Holy Spirit of God; there being no other principles of any true Religion, that can be ſerviceable to their ſalvation; no other means than thoſe which they have forſaken; no other ſacrifice for expiating ſins; no ſecond baptiſm; nor any other holy ſpirit or grace renewing their minds. And therefore he exhorts them to perſeverance, notwithſtanding any difficulties or ſufferings, ch. x. 32, &c. to xi. which as they did not hinder them at the firſt from becoming Chriſtians, though they endured a great fight of afflictions; ſo now ſhould not, from perſevering as ſuch, that they might receive the promiſe, foraſmuch as God would not tarry, but would both ſhortly deliver them, and eternally reward them. In the mean time, that they live by faith, until that they ſhould actually poſſeſs the promiſe, to the ſaving of the ſoul.

What has been hitherto mentioned is the ſubſtance of the Epiſtle, from the beginning to the eleventh chapter.

And to the intent they might ſo live by faith, and at length ſave their ſouls, he goes on, chap. xi. to ſet before them the power of the grace of faith, and propoſes the examples of the ſaints in former times. This faith, he tells them, is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen, ver. 1. i. e. a confident dependance upon God for the performance of his promiſe, though for the preſent we do not ſee it. Thus the ſervants of God renowned of old, of which he gives ſo many inſtances, throughout the xith chapter, and then tells them, ch. xii. ver. 1, to 14. that all thoſe examples of faith and conſtancy to be encouragements to them, to run on with patience in their Chriſtian race, eſpecially ſeeing Chriſt himſelf, the author and finiſher of our faith, or the leader and crowner thereof, by reſiſting unto blood, or ſuffering death, which yet they had not done, by his own ſufferings ſanctified afflictions in this life, in order to a glorious reward in Heaven. Nay, even for the preſent, thoſe very perſecutions and afflictions, at worſt are the badges and tokens of God's fatherly love to us, rather chaſtning us as his children, than that we ſhould loſe his eternal bliſs.

Afterwards ch. xii. 14. to the end thereof, he inſtructs them to adorn their Chriſtian profeſſion by what is very becoming it, viz. peace and holineſs, being free from hatred and variance, and impure luſts of the fleſh, and which was all along the main deſign, to take heed that no one amongſt them be ſo prophane a perſon, who, like Eſau, who ſold his birth-right, ſhould deſpiſe and caſt off their glorious privileges, in Chriſt Jeſus, and their intereſt in the Goſpel, and in being members of Chriſt's Holy Church, with the benefits of the new covenant through Chriſt's blood; which he expreſſes, after the Jewiſh manner, by the figurative terms of mount Sion, and the Heavenly Jeruſalem, with the dignity of being members of the general aſſembly, not conſiſting of one nation only, as that of the Iſraelites on mount Sinai, but of all, both Jews and Gentiles, with an innumerable company of Angels, and the Church of the firſt-born, of Apoſtles and others, who firſt received the Goſpel, whoſe names are written or enrolled in Heaven, &c. - - Theſe privileges were infinitely more valuable than the law given in mount Sinai, in ſuch a frightful and terrifying manner, with burnings and thundrings and lightnings; nor could that diſpenſation under the law continue without removing, but the happineſs under the Goſpel cannot be moved, but ſhall always remain.

Finally, ch. xiii. 1, &c. The Apoſtle gives them ſundry particular directions for a Chriſtian life and behaviour, and then again encourages them to perſevere in the faith, and to obey the governors of the Church who had the rule over them, and alſo cautions them againſt being ſeduced by their former leaders, who, whilſt they adhere to the Levitical ſacrifices, having no right to partake of the ſacrifice of Chriſt's death, nor of the Lord's table the Chriſtian altar, where that is ſet forth; no more than they could eat of the bodies or fleſh of the ſin-offering under the law, which was burnt without the camp, Exod. xxix. 14. and was a type or repreſentation of our ſin-offering which Jeſus made with his own blood, when he alſo according to that repreſentation of him ſuffered without the gate, unto him therefore we are to go, not relying upon the Moſaical law, but the croſs of Chriſt. Afterwards the Apoſtle requeſting their prayers for him, and beſeeching God to keep in ſervice and favour, concludes this excellent Epiſtle. And from the whole, amongſt many others, we may add theſe following obſervations.

I. In the Papiſt's ſacrifice of the maſs, or Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, they pretend to offer up unto God the Father, the body and blood of his Son Chriſt, as being ſubſtantially preſent under the appearances of bread and wine, according to the falſe doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and therefore affirm their ſaid oblation in the maſs to be in itſelf, or in its own virtue, a true, proper, and propitiatory ſacrifice for the ſins of the living and the dead; which is directly contrary to the doctrine of Paul, who ſays, ch. x. 10--12--14. that Chriſt offered one ſacrifice for ſins upon the croſs, and that by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified; that by perfecting for ever, Paul means the making a propitiation for, and expiating ſins appears from the teſtimony of the Prophet, which he produces to confirm this, ch. x. 16, 17. their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now, if Chriſt on the croſs hath made a perfect and compleat attonement and propitiation and ſatisfaction for ſins, by his own offering up himſelf once for all, as Paul voucheth he did, there is no occaſion for the repetition of ſuch ſacrifice as there was for the Jewiſh ſacrifices, ver. 11. and therefore, the Popiſh maſs and their ſacrifice, which is ſo great a part of their religious worſhip, and on which they ſo much depend for their well-being in this world and in the next, and with the want of which they upbraid the Proteſtants, hath no foundation in the Holy Scriptures but is contrary to them. And conſequently, is thus exploded by the ancient father of the Church Chryſoſtom, who explaining the 26th ver. of the ixth ch. ſays, What then do we offer every day? We offer indeed, but it is by making a commemoration of his death; and this ſacrifice is one, and not many, becauſe it was once offered, not as that which was carried in the holy of holies; that was a figure of this --- We offer not another, not a different ſacrifice as the Jewiſh high-prieſt did of old, but ſtill one and the ſame, or rather we perform the remembrance of a ſacrifice. And again Auſtin declares his opinion in theſe words, "The fleſh and blood of this ſacrifice, before Chriſt's coming, was promiſed by the ſacrifice for reſemblance in his paſſion, it was really and truly given, after his aſcenſion, it is celebrated per ſacramentum memoriæ, i. e. by a ſacrament of commemoration." --- This being a matter of great importance, was the more neceſſary to be added in this place, to what has been ſaid in my Annotations on the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

II. The wilful ſin threatned, ch. vi. 4, &c. and ch. x. 26, &c. after which it is impoſſible to renew them again to repentance, becauſe for ſuch there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſin, but, &c. is not every lapſing in time of perſecution, nor the prophaning of the Sacrament of Chriſt's body and blood, nor yet the falling into great ſins, through temptation, all which may be timely and truly repented of, and pardoned, but an utter renouncing Chriſt's Religion, a caſting him off, and maliciouſly reproaching Chriſt, and relapſing into Judaiſm, or Heatheniſm; for, the Apoſtle is warning the converted Jews from falling off again to their former Jewiſh religion; and thoſe who ſhould thus become apoſtates, he ſays, fall away, and, as it were, crucify the Son of God afreſh, and have trodden under foot the Son of God, and there is no other beſides, that can relieve them. So that this dreadful paſſage ought not to drive other ſinners into deſpair, who do not finally fall away from the Chriſtian faith and hope, but repent and reform.

CHAP. I.

1 Chriſt in theſe laſt times coming to us from the Father, 4 is preferred above the angels, both in perſon and office.

GOD who at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the prophets,

2 Hath in theſe laſt days ſpoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the worlds.

3 Who being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himſelf purged our ſins, ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high;

4 Being made ſo much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

5 For unto which of the angels ſaid he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son?

6 And again, when he bringeth in the firſt-begotten into the world, he ſaith, And let all the angels of God worſhip him.

7 And of the angels he ſaith, Who maketh his angels ſpirits, and his miniſters a flame of fire.

8 But unto the Son he ſaith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a ſceptre of righteouſneſs is the ſceptre of thy kingdom:

9 Thou haſt loved righteouſneſs, and hated iniquity; therefore God even thy God hath anointed thee with the oyl of gladneſs above thy fellows.

10 And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning haſt laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands.

11 They ſhall periſh, but thou remaineſt: and they all ſhall wax old as doth a garment;

12 And as a veſture ſhalt thou fold them up, and they ſhall be changed: but thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall not fail.

13 But to which of the angels ſaid he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footſtool?

14 Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation?

Ver. 1.——In divers manners.] i.e. Sometimes in viſions, at other times in dreams, and to Moſes by mouth to mouth; ſee Numb. xi. 6—8. and my annotations on Iſa. i. 1.

Ver. 2.———In theſe laſt days.] Laſt, becauſe in them the Levitical law was abrogated, and had an end.

— By his Son.] Only begotten Son Jeſus Chriſt; ſee ver. 5.

Ver. 3.—When he had by himſelf purged our ſins.] See the annotations on chap. ix. ver. 26.

Ver. 4.—By inheritance.] The Apoſtle uſeth this phraſe, not in regard to the poſſeſſions of the Son of God, but in regard of the ſhallow underſtandings of men, to ſhew that as we are ſenſible the Angels are much preferable to human nature in the continual and perpetual enjoyment of the beatifick viſion, always ſeeing God face to face, ſo we ought to eſteem Chriſt the Son of God to be infinitely ſuperior to them, and that whereas they are only ſubjects and miniſtring ſpirits, ſervants of the will of God, he, the Son, is above all, and Lord of all; as is proved in the following context.

Ver. 5. Unto which of the angels ſaid he at any time.] Here the Apoſtle by an interrogation tacitly denies that God at any time ever ſaid to any of the Angels, — Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.] As it is recorded in Pſal. ii. 7.

— I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son.] See 2 Sam. vii. 14. 1 Chron. xxii. 10. Pſal. lxxxix. 26, 27.

Ver. 6.—Let all the angels of God worſhip him.] See Deut. xxxii. 4. according to the LXX. and Pſal. xcvii. 7.

Ver. 8, 9. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, and the ſceptre of righteouſneſs is the ſceptre of thy kingdom, &c.] See Pſal. xlv. 6, 7.

Ver. 10. Thou, Lord in the beginning haſt laid the foundation of the earth, &c.] Pſal. cii. 25.

Ver. 11. They ſhall periſh, but thou remaineſt, &c.] Iſa. xxxiv. 4. and li. 6.

Ver. 13.—Sit on my right hand, &c.] See Pſal. cx. 1.

CHAP. II.

1 We ought to be obedient to Chriſt Jeſus, 5 and that becauſe he vouchſafed to take our nature upon him, 14 as it was neceſſary.

THerefore we ought to give the more earneſt heed to the things which we have heard, leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip.

2 For if the word ſpoken by angels was ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion, and diſobedience received a juſt recompenſe of reward;

3 How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

4 God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the holy Ghoſt, according to his own will?

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in ſubjection the world to come, whereof we ſpeak.

6 But one in a certain place teſtified, ſaying, What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him?

7 Thou madeſt him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedſt him with glory and honour, and didſt ſet him over the works of thy hands:

8 Thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet. For in that he put all in ſubjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we ſee not yet all things put under him.

9 But we ſee Jeſus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God ſhould taſte death for every man.

10 For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many ſons unto glory, to make the captain of their ſalvation perfect through ſufferings.

11 For both he that ſanctifieth, and they who are ſanctified, are all of one: for which cauſe he is not aſhamed to call them brethren,

12 Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midſt of the church will I ſing praiſe unto thee.

13 And again, I will put my truſt in him. And again, Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me.

14 Foraſmuch then as the children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame: that through death he might deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil;

15 And deliver them, who through fear of death were all their life-time ſubject to bondage.

16 For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham.

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren; that he might be a merciful and faithful high-prieſt, in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people:

18 For in that he himſelf hath ſuffered, being tempted, he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted.

Ver. 1. Therefore.] Hence, even becauſe Chriſt is God and the everlaſting King of the Church, as is proved in the preceding chapter from the Old Teſtament.

— We have heard.] In his Name, from his miniſters, and preachers of the Goſpel.

Ver. 2.—Spoken by angels.] To Moſes, for to be delivered by him to the people of Iſrael; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 2. Pſal. lxviii. 17.

— Every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience, &c.] And yet every one that tranſgreſſed and diſobeyed that law were to be puniſhed accordingly; ſee Deut. xxvii. 26.

Ver. 3. At firſt.] i. e. Was firſt preached by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf; ſee Matt. iv. 17. Mark i. 14.

— Confirmed unto us by them that heard him.] See Luke i. 2.

Ver. 6.— In a certain place.] Pſal. viii. 4, &c.

Ver. 7.——A little lower than the angels.] Or rather, as the original will permit us to ſpeak more rationally, a little while inferior to angels.

Ver. 8 —But now we ſee not yet all things put under him.] i. e. Under man, now, in the fleſh; ſee the context from ver. 6. for it cannot be meant of Jeſus, becauſe it is immediately added that he is crowned with honour and glory, ver. 9, 10.

Ver. 12. Saying, &c.] In Pſal. xxii. 22—25.

Ver. 13.—I will put, &c.] See Pſal. xviii. 2.

— Behold, I, &c.] See Iſa. viii. 18.

Ver. 15.——Subject to bondage.] To be led captive of the Devil.

CHAP. III.

1 Chriſt is more worthy than Moſes, 7 therefore if we believe not in him, we ſhall be more worthy puniſhment than hard hearted Iſrael.

WHerefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, conſider the Apoſtle and high-prieſt of our profeſſion, Chriſt Jeſus;

2 Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as alſo Moſes was faithful in all his houſe.

3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moſes, in as much as he who hath builded the houſe, hath more honour than the houſe.

4 For every houſe is builded by ſome man; but he that built all things is God.

5 And Moſes verily was faithful in all his houſe as a ſervant, for a teſtimony of thoſe things which were to be ſpoken after;

6 But Chriſt as a ſon over his own houſe: whoſe houſe are we, if we hold faſt the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

7 Wherefore as the holy Ghoſt ſaith, To day if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderneſs:

9 When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and ſaw my works forty years.

10 Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and ſaid, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways.

11 So I ſware in my wrath, They ſhall not enter into my reſt.

12 Take heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

13 But exhort one another daily while it is called, To day; leſt any of you be hardned through the deceitfulneſs of ſin.

14 For we are made partakers of Chriſt, if we hold the beginning of our confidence ſtedfaſt unto the end;

15 While it is ſaid, To day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

16 For ſome when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moſes.

17 But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had ſinned, whoſe carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs?

18 And to whom ſware he that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, but to them that believed not?

19 So we ſee that they could not enter in becauſe of unbelief.

Ver. 1. Wherefore.] i. e. Let theſe qualifications of Chriſt perſuade you to believe and hear him as a Prophet and teacher ſent from God; as the following context endeavours to do.

— Heavenly calling.] Through the miniſtry of Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

Ver. 2.—Appointed him.] Or, ſent him to redeem the world.

— In all his houſe.] In that part of God's covenant with man, which was committed to the diſpenſation of Moſes. As if the Apoſtle ſhould ſay, I admit that Moſes was faithful in the execution of his commiſſion, but then it muſt be noted, that the commiſſion entruſted to the Son of God, was of greater concernment to mankind in general, viz. Moſes was faithful in all that appertained unto him, but his commiſſion was much inferior to this of the Son of God.

Ver. 4. Every houſe is built by ſome.] Or, every Church, or holy congregation, or every diſpenſation from God to man, is through the means or conveyance of ſome man.

— He that built all things is God.] But thoſe diſpenſations, of which they are miniſters, are not their own, but entruſted to them from God.

Ver. 6.—Unto the end.] i. e. To death. Which is the end of all temptations, afflictions, perſecutions, and of life itſelf.

Ver. 7.—11. The Holy Ghoſt ſaith.] By the mouth of the Prophet in Pſal. xcv. 7.

Ver. 12.—The living God.] The Almighty God, by whom we live, move, and have our being, and particularly ſtiled the Living God, in oppoſition to thoſe lifeleſs ſtocks and ſtones worſhipped by the Heathens.

Ver. 17. But with whom was he grieved forty years?] It is recorded in Numb. xiv. 22,—29, &c. and xxvi. 65. Jude 5.

Ver. 18.—To whom ſware he? &c.] See Numb. xiv. 30. Deut. i. 34, 35.

CHAP. IV.

1 The reſt of Chriſtians is attained by faith. 12 The power of Gods word. 14 By our high-prieſt Jeſus the Son of God, ſubject to infirmities, but not ſin, 16 We muſt and may go boldly to the throne of grace.

LET us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe being left us of entring into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it.

2 For unto us was the goſpel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.

3 For we which have believed do enter into reſt, as he ſaid, As I have ſworn in my wrath, If they ſhall enter into my reſt: although the works were finiſhed from the foundation of the world.

4 For he ſpake in a certain place of the ſeventh day on this wiſe, And God did reſt the ſeventh day from all his works.

5 And in this place again, If they ſhall enter into my reſt.

6 Seeing therefore it remaineth that ſome muſt enter therein, and they to whom it was firſt preached, entred not in becauſe of unbelief:

7 Again, he limiteth a certain day, ſaying in David, To day after ſo long a time; as it is ſaid, To day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

8 For if Jeſus had given them reſt, then would he not afterward have ſpoken of another day.

9 There remaineth therefore a reſt to the people of God.

10 For he that is entred into his reſt, he alſo hath ceaſed from his own works, as God did from his.

11 Let us labour therefore to enter into that reſt, leſt any man fall after the ſame example of unbelief.

12 For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and ſharper than any two-edged ſword, piercing even to the dividing aſunder of ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joynts and marrow, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

13 Neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight: but all things are naked, and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

14 Seeing then that we have a great high-prieſt, that is paſſed into the heavens, Jeſus the Son of God, let us hold faſt our profeſſion.

15 For we have not an high-prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without ſin.

16 Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

Ver. 1. Leſt a promiſe being left us of entring into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Brethren of the ſeed of Abraham, tho' you are now deprived of your ancient liberty, and are brought into bondage with your nation by the Roman empire, but more eſpecially, ye, who have embraced the faith of Chriſt, and are perſecuted for the ſame, do not be dejected; for, beſides that promiſe of the reſt of Canaan to our fathers, we have yet to day a promiſe left concerning a ſpiritual and everlaſting reſt; ſee ver. 9.

Ver. 2.—Unto us.] Chriſtians.

— Was the Goſpel.] i. e. A promiſe of grace.

— Unto them.] Our forefathers in the times of the law and the Prophets.

— The word preached.] i. e. The promiſe of grace.

— Did not profit them.] Unto ſalvation.

— With faith.] In Chriſt, whom the Prophets had foretold ſhould come into the world to make their law perfect; and therefore it follows:

Ver. 3. We which have believed.] In Chriſt.

— Do enter.] Are enabled to enter through that faith into reſt.

— As he ſaid.] In Pſal. xcv. 11.

Ver. 4.———He ſpake in a certain place of the ſeventh day.] See Gen. ii. 2. Exod. xxxi. 17. and my Diſſertation on the Sabbath before in the Epiſtles.

Ver. 7.—Saying in David.] Pſal. xcv. 7.

Ver. 8.———Jeſus.] Here it ſhould be read Joſhua; ſee Bp. Pearſon on the word Jeſus in the expoſition of the Apoſtle's Creed.

Ver. 9. There remaineth therefore a reſt, &c.] See above, the notes at ver. 1.

Ver. 11.—Of unbelief.] See ver. 2. Some alſo would tranſlate it, diſobedience.

Ver. 12.—The word of God.] I know that the ſtream of interpreters are againſt me, who hereby underſtand only the written word of God; an interpretation which I can no ways adopt for genuine; becauſe the Apoſtle in this Epiſtle uſeth the outmoſt of his argument to confirm in his brethren a right faith in Chriſt the Son of God, who by the Evangeliſt John is expreſly ſtiled the word of God, chap. i. ver. 1. in his Goſpel; and beſides we read here in the context, not only that the word of God is deſcribed by the attributes proper to God himſelf, but here is an expreſs declaration of a perſon in the pronoun poſſeſſive his; for it follows in the next verſe, neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight, &c. to the end of ver. 15.

CHAP. V.

1 The authority and honour of our Saviour's prieſthood. 11 Negligence in the knowledge thereof is reproved.

FOR every high-prieſt taken from among men, is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and ſacrifices for ſins:

2 Who can have compaſſion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himſelf alſo is compaſſed with infirmity:

3 And by reaſon hereof he ought, as for the people, ſo alſo for himſelf, to offer for ſins.

4 And no man taketh this honour unto himſelf, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron:

5 So alſo, Chriſt glorified not himſelf, to be made an high-prieſt; but he that ſaid unto him, Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee.

6 As he ſaith alſo in another place, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec.

7 Who in the days of his fleſh, when he had offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, unto him that was able to ſave him from death, and was heard, in that he feared;

8 Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience, by the things which he ſuffered:

9 And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal ſalvation unto all them that obey him;

10 Called of God an high-prieſt, after the order of Melchiſedec.

11 Of whom we have many things to ſay, and hard to be uttered; ſeeing ye are dull of hearing.

12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the firſt principles of the oracles of God; and are become ſuch as have need of milk, and not of ſtrong meat.

13 For every one that uſeth milk is unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs: for he is a babe.

14 But ſtrong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even thoſe who by reaſon of uſe have their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil.

Ver. 1. For, every high-prieſt, &c.] Here, the Apoſtle having juſt before affirmed, that Jeſus the Son of God is our great high-prieſt, ch. iv. 14. he begins to make his aſſertion good by proving hereafter, that all the properties of the high-prieſt are eminent in him.

Ver. 4. And no man taketh this honour unto himſelf, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.] See how Aaron was called in Exod. xxviii. 1. 1 Chron. xxiii. 13. Where it ought to be remarked, as the Apoſtle intended, that no man can be a lawful prieſt in the Church of Chriſt, unleſs he have his calling from God, by the ways and according to the laws which he hath eſtabliſhed for that purpoſe.

Ver. 5. So alſo Chriſt glorified not himſelf.] For even Chriſt conſidered according to the fleſh, did not take the office upon himſelf, but was as really called to the high-prieſthood as was Aaron.

———He that ſaid.] Pſ. ii. 7.

———To day have I begotten thee.] Not after the manner of human generation, but this is only ſaid in reſpect of men, to whom God hath in theſe latter times ſent his Son to redeem all mankind.

Ver. 6.——In another place.] Pſ. cx. 4. See alſo ch. vii. 17.

——After the order of Melchiſedec.] i. e. Both king and prieſt, and therefore more excellent than the order of Aaron, who was no more than a prieſt.

Ver. 7. Who.] i. e. This your high-prieſt, Jeſus Chriſt. Compare the context with Matt. xxvi. 37, 53. Mark xiv. 33, 36. Luke xxii. 43. John xii. 27.

——In that he feared.] Or, for his piety, which he ſhew'd for our imitation.

Ver. 9.——Being made perfect.] Or fully conſecrated by his death.

——That obey him.] In believing, and doing his word; for, bleſſed are they that hear the word of God and do it.

Ver. 10. Called.] Being after his death, reſurrection and aſcenſion into Heaven really inveſted with his full power, with both the prieſtly and kingly dignity, as Pſ. cx. 4. it is ſaid that he was inſtalled in his prieſthood, placed at the right hand of God, Pſ. cx. 1.

———After the order, &c.] See ver. 6.

Ver. 12.———Oracles of God.] i. e. The law and the Prophets, &c.

———Need of milk, &c.] See 1 Cor. iii. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 13.———A babe.] See 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Eph. iv. 14.

Ver. 14.———Full age.] Or, perfect in the faith, or come to years to diſcretion, capable of uſing or exerciſing their rational faculties and powers.

———Of uſe.] Or, of a habit, or, perfection.

———Exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil.] i. e. Thoſe who not only by rational inference, but alſo by their own experience of things, know how to judge concerning them, whether they be good or evil, that the Will may be directed right to make choice of the Good, and to refuſe the evil. Therefore, I ſhall ſhew how reaſon doth exert its ſkill and power, and alſo what helps it has in the diſcovery of the good or evil of any thing propoſed in

A Diſſertation on Good and Evil.

By the preceding note it may be obſerved, that I have two things in this Diſſertation to conſider, viz. How, and by what means reaſon exerts its ſkill and power towards, and makes a diſcovery of the good or evil of any thing propoſed.

As to the firſt general; we are to ſearch into the nature, and to conſider the cauſes, and effects or tendency to the good or evil of any thing propoſed. Now,

By the nature of a thing, I mean, the ſimple naked eſſence of that thing, by which it appears both uncompounded, and uncloathed of all accidents and circumſtances that may cauſe any kind of alteration in it. For a thing may be good or evil, in and of itſelf, nakedly conſidered; or it may be ſo from the circumſtances that attend it: So that what is very good in its own nature, may accidentally be very evil; and what is naturally evil, may by accident be very good.

To inſtance in thoſe two contraries, pleaſure and pain; pleaſure, in and of itſelf, is good, but by reaſon of ſome circumſtances that may attend it, it may be evil: As, when 'tis converſant about unlawful things; or, men indulge themſelves therein, beyond the bounds which God and nature ſets, and ſuffer all their thoughts to be taken up about it, and thinking it their only happineſs, make it their chief and only aim; ſo as totally to neglect ſuch other things as do or may promote ſome greater good. And ſo on the other hand, for pain; this, tho' an evil in itſelf, yet ſuch circumſtances may attend it at ſometimes, as may make it very good and truly advantageous to us: As, when 'tis ſent for chaſtiſement, in order to work a reformation in us; or is inflicted to procure ſome other neceſſary good, which, it may be, cannot otherwiſe be had; or to prevent ſome greater evil, which might otherwiſe befal us.

Indeed, moſt things that men in this life are concerned with, are good or evil, according to the circumſtances that do or may attend them; and are alterable from better to worſe, or from worſe to better, from profitable to hurtful, or from hurtful to profitable, according as their circumſtances vary.

But, ſuppoſing any thing ſtripped naked of all circumſtances, and appearing as it is by nature; if it be obvious to ſenſe, we may perceive it to be good or evil, by the immediate pleaſure or pain, the preſent ſatisfaction or uneaſineſs it cauſes and procures: But if it be not obvious to ſenſe, but only to the underſtanding, the intrinſic good or evil of it, which is then more properly the work of reaſon to diſcover, may be eaſily diſcerned, by its natural energy and power to create delight and complaiſance, or abhorrence and averſion in us.

Though, after all, I muſt confeſs, our nature, ſince we are naturally ſo prone to evil, and ſo averſe to good, that it is very difficult, if not impoſſible, for human reaſon to determine, at firſt ſight, concerning moſt things we are converſant about, whether they be good, or evil.

Therefore, the ſureſt way, whereby to have a juſt and true conception of the things propoſed, ſo as to be able to pronounce a righteous judgment on them, and diſcover whether they be ſimply good or evil, is, by conſidering them impartially, with a due regard to all the circumſtances that do or may attend them. For,

Generally, ſuch as the cauſe is, ſuch is the thing that proceeds from it. I ſay, generally, it is ſo. For it may ſo happen, that good may proceed from evil, or evil from good, according as the circumſtances that may attend them are. Nay, ſometimes good and evil both may proceed from one and the ſame cauſe; as anger may be the cauſe of good, or evil, according as 'tis circumſtantiated. And therefore we are cautioned, or rather adviſ'd, ſo to be angry, as not to ſin, Eph. iv. 26. Which implies, that we may ſometimes do well, and ſometimes ill, in being angry.

However, I muſt here obſerve, that when good proceeds from evil, or evil comes of good, theſe are by accidents, and are not to be looked on as the natural iſſues or productions of good or evil. For, that which is good in itſelf, cannot of itſelf be the cauſe of evil; nor can any thing that is evil in itſelf, be the cauſe of good.

And as to thoſe things which have firſt and ſecond cauſes, we muſt not be determined abſolutely by the ſecond cauſes of them, which ſometimes may deceive us, or prejudice our judgments, ſo as to make us chuſe amiſs: but we muſt look higher, to the ſource and fountain of thoſe things, from whence they firſt ariſe and flow: For as that is, ſo the products of it will be, either good, or evil.

Now there are two firſt cauſes of all moral good and evil; God for the former, and the Devil for the latter. Whatever comes from God, muſt needs be good; and the Devil cannot be the cauſe of any thing, but what is either evil in itſelf, or tends to evil.

I ſay, Whatever comes from God, muſt needs be good; that is, in and of itſelf, though by accident it may be otherwiſe. For God can be the cauſe of nothing that is evil, though for wiſe reaſons he ſometimes does permit it. To inſtance in created nature, we are expreſly told, That God made all things very good, Gen. i. And yet we find that ſeveral things which he created, are, by his permiſſion, through the malice of the Devil, and our own vicious inclinations, turned to evil. But this evil is not in the things themſelves, but ariſes from the evil uſe, that men, by the inſtigation of the Devil, or their own luſts, do put them to.

But, to return to moral good and evil; theſe, as they are themſelves, muſt have a good or evil cauſe, by which men are excited to them, either by ſecondary means, or by immediate ſuggeſtion, or by preſcription and advice. Now the ſureſt and ſafeſt way of judging of the good or evil of any thing propoſed, is not from the cauſe or author, as exciting us unto it by ſecondary means, or by immediate ſuggeſtion, but by preſcription and advice. For though in many inſtances, ſuch as the cauſe or author is, ſuch is the thing propoſed, and ſuch will be the means in order to it; yet ſometimes the means ſuggeſted to us, and which we are prompted to make uſe of, may have an aim and tendency unto, or may accidentally promote, what is contrary to the thing propoſed, and to the intention of the perſon that propoſed it, ſo as, inſtead of effecting what is good, to be productive of what is manifeſtly evil. And as to immediate ſuggeſtion, how fair and juſt ſoever it may ſeem to be, yet there are ſeveral circumſtances that may attend it, which will render it unfit, and dangerous to be comply'd with: And all thoſe circumſtances muſt be well and ſeriouſly conſidered, before we can with reaſon, or with ſafety venture to comply therewith. For otherwiſe, we may take that for a motion of God's Holy Spirit, which is only a ſuggeſtion of the Devil. But now, we know that God cannot be the cauſe or author of any evil; and by conſequence, that he neither will, nor can preſcribe or adviſe any thing that is ſo, or that has a tendency thereto: And therefore, the ſafeſt rule to walk by, is preſcription and advice. And hence we may, and muſt conclude, that whatever God adviſes or preſcribes, muſt needs be good; and whatever any one ſuggeſts or adviſes to the contrary, muſt needs be evil: And ſo on the other hand, whatever he forbids muſt needs be evil; and no authority or means whatever can make it good. But, beſides all this,

We muſt conſider the effects; or the tendency of ſuch a thing to good or evil. And this one rule, if well obſerved and followed, would go very far towards the prevention and cure of moſt ſorts of wickedneſs that are committed in the world; it being chiefly owing to the want of foregoing conſideration, and neglect of weighing the conſequences and tendency of things, that men are, and continue to be guilty of moſt ſins. Whereas, if men, when any moral action is ſuggeſted to them, would afford themſelves the time, before they venture to reduce it into practice, to conſider and compare it, as they may and ought to do, and examine all the circumſtances that do or may attend it, and eſpecially the aim and tendency thereof to good or evil; I verily believe, they would forbear committing many ſins, which for want of ſuch deliberation, they are too often guilty of, and be much more inclined to holineſs and virtue, than they are, or can be, while they will not give themſelves the leiſure to conſider. This is, undoubtedly, one main reaſon, why moſt mens choice is ſo wretchedly directed; why they are ſo very prone, on all occaſions, to chuſe and follow what is evil, rather than what is good. For I cannot yet be brought to think ſo hardly of any man, who is endued with reaſon, and is capable of uſing it, that he would wilfully go on in ſuch a way, as will infallibly lead him to deſtruction, if upon mature deliberation he was convinced, and throughly perſwaded in himſelf, that this muſt needs be ſo; nor would he purpoſely avoid thoſe ways that lead to everlaſting bliſs and glory, if upon due conſideration of them he had reaſon to believe they would for certain lead him thither. For, ſelf-preſervation, and ſelf-love are innate principles, ſo naturally and firmly ſeated in the ſouls of all men, that they cannot but be ſenſible of, and act according to them; and therefore, it cannot be ſuppoſed that any, but an ideot or a madman, can be ſo much an enemy to himſelf, as willingly to chuſe eternal ruin, and oppoſe his own eternal welfare. No; if men do miſs of happineſs, and are made for ever miſerable, it is becauſe they do not well conſider the aim and tendency of their actions, no more than they do the nature, or the cauſes of them; but ruſh on at all adventures, as a horſe ruſhes into the battle, Jer. viii. 6. without conſidering the danger of ſuch actions, how very prejudicial they are and will be, both to their preſent and eternal good, and what a natural aim and tendency they have to all manner of evil, both at preſent, and for ever.

Therefore, to conclude this point; to conſider well the aim and tendency of things, is one very ſafe and proper way, or means, towards a diſcovery of their nature, whether they be good or evil. For, generally ſpeaking, as to moſt things, natural or moral, and as to the laſt eſpecially, that which is good in its own nature, can have no tendency to evil; nor can that which is naturally evil, have any tendency to good: But ſuch as the thing itſelf is, and continues to be, whether good or evil, ſuch will be the effects and conſequences of it. For, what our Saviour ſays of good and evil men, Matt. vii. 17, 18, 20. may alſo be applied to good or evil things; Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Wherefore by their fruits ye ſhall know them. And ſo much may ſuffice to ſhew, how reaſon does exert its ſkill and power, towards a diſcovery of the good or evil of any thing propoſed. Now,

II. Secondly, the help that reaſon has towards making this diſcovery, is principally

The experience of the things themſelves, that are propos'd. For,

Experience produces ſuch conviction in the minds of men, as they are not able to withſtand; and is one of the moſt cogent reaſons that can be offered, for the belief of any matter; and the ſtrongeſt proof of any, next to the teſtimony of God himſelf, of the good or evil of any thing, about which human nature is, or can be converſant.

Nay, ſometimes the word of God proves inſufficient to convince men of the good or evil of their actions, till by their own experience they find them to be ſo, as God has ſaid they are. Of this we have an early and a lamentable inſtance in the fall of our firſt parents. God gave them only one command, not to eat of the tree of knowledge; Gen. ii. 17. and to ſhew the evil and danger of tranſgreſſing his command, he threatens them with death, if they ſhould eat thereof. And yet, they ventured to tranſgreſs, as either not believing, or doubting of the truth of what he ſaid, or at leaſt, hoping he would not be ſo ſevere; and ſo were, by their own experience, convinced of the evil of their diſobedience. For upon this, they found themſelves ſubject to diſeaſes and mortality, and obnoxious to all other miſeries, that this world, made evil by their ſin, could furniſh; beſides, what was much worſe, the bitter remorſe and torment of their conſciences, for having been ſo wicked as to diſobey their Maker, who, on that very ſcore, had an abſolute and unqueſtionable right to their obedience; and ſo fooliſh as to purchaſe knowledge by ſo dear experience; a knowledge, for which neither they themſelves, nor their poſterity are any whit the better, but very much the worſe; and which has made this world, which God created very good, a world ſo very evil, that it muſt be renounced by every one that will be ſaved: And, which was worſt of all, they had, no doubt, a dreadful proſpect of eternal miſery before their eyes, from which nothing leſs than infinite mercy and infinite merit could deliver them; ſo that had not God promiſed to provide an all-ſufficient ranſom for them and their poſterity, they muſt have ſunk down under the burden of their guilt, into that unfathomable gulph of horror and deſpair, of terror and amazement, of perpetual anguiſh, torment and vexation, from whence there is no redemption.

And thus it has been, ever ſince the fall, with all mankind: We feel the ſmart of our firſt parents ſin, and upon every actual tranſgreſſion of our own, we feel it double; and ſo, by our own experience, as well as theirs, we come to know the difference of good and evil. When we do good, what inward joy and comfort do we feel? and when we have done any evil, what remorſe of conſcience, what reluctancy and inward torment are we vexed with for it?

I might give inſtances of many virtues, and as many vices, our own experience of which will ſhew us plainly, which of the two are good, and which are evil; and conſequently, which we ought to chuſe, and to purſue, in order to our happineſs. But let this that has been offered ſerve to ſhew, that mens own experience, their internal or external ſenſe of pleaſure or profit, pain or loſs, or any other good or evil, will eaſily evince the good or evil, the ſafety or the danger, of doing or forbearing, of chuſing or refuſing any thing propoſed.

There is another great help to reaſon in this choice, but I ſhall defer ſpeaking of it till the concluſion of the New Teſtament; when I ſhall cloſe the work with a Diſſertation upon certainty.

CHAP. VI.

1 He exhorteth not to fall back from the faith: 11 But to be ſtedfaſt, 12 diligent and patient to wait upon God, 13 becauſe God is moſt ſure in his promiſe.

THerefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt; let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God,

2 Of the doctrine of baptiſms, and of laying on of hands, and of reſurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

3 And this will we do, if God permit.

4 For it is impoſſible for thoſe who were once enlightned, and have taſted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the holy Ghoſt,

5 And have taſted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come;

6 If they ſhall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance: ſeeing they crucify to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to an open ſhame.

7 For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, receiveth bleſſing from God:

8 But that which beareth thorns and briers, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing; whoſe end is to be burned.

9 But, beloved, we are perſwaded better things of you, and things that accompany ſalvation, though we thus ſpeak.

10 For God is not unrighteous, to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have ſhewed toward his name, in that ye have miniſtred to the ſaints, and do miniſter.

11 And we deſire that every one of you do ſhew the ſame diligence, to the full aſſurance of hope unto the end:

12 That ye be not ſlothful, but followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promiſes.

13 For when God made promiſe to Abraham, becauſe he could ſware by no greater, he ſware by himſelf,

14 Saying, Surely, bleſſing, I will bleſs thee, and multiplying, I will multiply thee.

15 And ſo after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promiſe.

16 For men verily ſwear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all ſtrife.

17 Wherein God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath:

18 That by two immutable things, in which it was impoſſible for God to lye, we might have a ſtrong conſolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope ſet before us:

19 Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entreth into that within the vail,

20 Whither the forerunner is for us entred, even Jeſus, made an high-prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec.

Ver. 1. Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt.] This is an inference from the premiſes, ch. v. 13, 14. and ſignifies as much as to ſay, Let us therefore, who have embraced the faith of Chriſt, and been ſo well inſtructed therein, not ſhew, by our falling back to our former profeſſion, and denying that faith, that we have ſtill nead of ſuch inſtructions which only becomes thoſe who are not perfected, or of full age, ch. v. 14. As for example; to be inſtructed in the very firſt principles of Chriſtianity, ſuch as the ſignification, virtue and uſe of the ſacrament of baptiſm, &c.

Ver. 2.——The doctrine of baptiſms.] I have already in the courſe of theſe Annotations given you a Diſſertation on this doctrine, to which I refer my readers at the end of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; ſo that I ſhall only add in this place, in oppoſition to thoſe, who ſupport the validity of Lay-baptiſm, That no ſuch doctrine is found either expreſſed in, are fairly deduceable from Scripture; and yet, if not abſolutely neceſſary to the ſalvation of infants, who are guilty of no actual tranſgreſſion, and I hope are ſaved through the belief of their parents, is certainly requiſite not only to the ſalvation of ſuch as are come to a full age, (ch. v. 14.) but alſo to qualify them for accepting of and executing any office as of deacon, prieſt or biſhop in the Chriſtian Church; and conſequently they who are promoted to any of thoſe orders or dignities ought to examine themſelves whether they be of the faith, or baptized by a lawful miniſter into the covenanted grace of Chriſt (ſee the Rubrick before the office of baptiſm) For otherwiſe their ordination is made void, becauſe the perſon is diſqualified, not being a member of Chriſt, how then can he be a miniſter of his Words and Sacraments, much leſs confer that power of miniſtration upon others? ſee Acts xix. 5.

——Laying on of hands.] See Acts viii. 14.——17.

For the full explication of the text, be pleaſed to take notice, that laying on of hands, or impoſition of hands, as 'tis more ſcholaſtically termed, is a Sacred Rite, whereby ſome holy perſon, that prays for, or bleſſes another, particularly points out the perſon ſo prayed for or bleſſed as one, on whom grace or other ſpecial benefit is to be conferred: Which accordingly we find made uſe of either in the Old or New Teſtament, in the four following inſtances,

1. In ſimple benediction or bleſſing of perſons; thus, in the Old Teſtament, the Patriarch Jacob in bleſſing the ſons of Joſeph, laid his hands upon their heads, Gen. xlviii. 14, 15. And in the New, our Saviour is ſaid, To take little children up in his arms, to lay his hands upon them, and bleſs them, Mark. x. 16.

2. In deſignation of perſons to ſome holy function, or ordination of prieſts or miniſters; thus we read, Numb. xxvii. 18. under the Levitical diſpenſation, The Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Take thee Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and lay thine hand upon him; as a conſequent of which we are told, Deut. xxxiv. 9. That, Joſhua the ſon of Nun was full of the ſpirit of wiſdom, for Moſes had laid his hands upon him. Conformable whereunto we have the like practice regiſtred under the Goſpel œconomy, Acts xiii. 3. And when they had faſted and prayed, and laid their hands upon them, they ſent them away, meaning Barnabas and Saul, to whom God had thereby imparted gifts proper for the work whereunto he had called them, Acts xiii. 2. which like gift Paul puts Timothy in mind of, when he charges him thus, 1 Tim. iv. 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

3. This rite was made uſe of by our Bleſſed Saviour and his Apoſtles, in curing diſeaſes and healing the ſick. So we find, Mark vi. 5. That he (our Saviour) could do no mighty work in his own country, ſave that he laid his hands upon a few ſick folk and healed them: Nay, this is one of thoſe very ſigns promiſed to thoſe that ſhould believe in the name of Chriſt. Mark xvi. 18. They ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover: Accordingly, Paul cured Publius's father of a fever, Acts xxviii. 8.

Laſtly, This rite was made uſe of in Scripture, by the Apoſtles, at confirmation, or prayer with impoſition of hands, for the eſtabliſhment and ſtrengthning ſuch in the faith, as had been already baptized; which inſtitution of theirs God was pleaſed ſo far to approve of, that he did actually give wonderful meaſures of the ſpirit, to thoſe on whom they laid their hands; thereby honouring the governors of his Church, and engaging all the members thereof to be ſubject to them, and to be at peace one with another. This appears from that famous inſtance, Acts viii. 14, 15, 16, 17. where, when the Samaritans had been converted and baptized by Philip the deacon, they did not receive the Holy Ghoſt, until Peter and John had confirmed them, from whence the fathers generally deduce this practice. But that this was generally conſtituted among the Apoſtles is evident, becauſe Paul meeting with ſome baptized perſons at Epheſus, did in like manner lay his hands upon them, and confirm them, Acts xix. 6. of which he minds them, Eph. i. 13. In whom alſo after that ye believed ye were ſealed with the holy ſpirit of promiſe. And ſo we may juſtly believe he did in other Churches, whereupon he ſaith to thoſe of Corinth, 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. He which confirmeth us with you in Chriſt, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath alſo ſealed us, &c. See Dr. Combois, diſc. on the office of confirmation.

Now, whether by the doctrine of laying on of hands in the text, is meant all the four ſorts juſt mentioned, or that of confirmation only, is not very material: For though ſome commentators will have theſe words ſpeak of all of them, becauſe the Apoſtle juſt before-mentioned the doctrine of baptiſms, which they ſay includes the ſeveral ſpecies of it, viz. That of the Jews, of John the Baptiſt, and our Saviour's; that of blood, Matt. xx. 23. That of fire, Matt. iii. 11. That of water externally, as well was the internal one of the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Pet. iii. 21. And others more probably, will have them deſign confirmation ſingly, becauſe he is here reckoning up the fundamentals of religion, amongſt which impoſition of hands in abſolving penitents (another Apoſtolical uſage of this ceremony, though not of expreſs Scripture foundation) cannot be numbred, becauſe taken in, in the word repentance before; nor that of ordination, becauſe it is one of thoſe myſteries of perfection to which Paul goes on chap. vii. nor either of the other two, upon very obvious accounts: We may hence learn however, that confirmation is generally thought to be grounded here; for which I might urge to you many ancient authorities; but becauſe I would not ſeem oſtentatious, and modern writers are more authentick with ſome men than the primitive fathers, let me juſt tell you that moſt of the old reformed Divines of note, ſuch as Beza, Illyricus, Chemnitius, Zanchius, and others, are of this opinion; particularly Calvin (who ſhall ſtand for all) is expreſs upon the place, Hic unus locus abunde teſtatur hujus ceremoniæ originem fluxiſſe ab Apoſtolis, &c. This one place, ſaith he, evidently ſhews that confirmation was inſtituted by the Apoſtles.

Having thus explained the meaning of the text, and ſhewn that by the doctrine of laying on of hands is meant confirmation; I ſhall now ſhew what the Church of England meaneth by retaining the practice thereof, who teacheth us, that it is now uſed, and conferred to enable thoſe who are confirmed to know the word and to do the will of God, as well as they can. So that

The benefit which they receive, who come duly qualified to confirmation, according to the doctrine of our Church, is the infuſion of that heavenly grace into their hearts, mentioned in the Biſhop's benediction, and ſpecified in the firſt prayer of that office, as we are aſſured out of the office of confirmation, as ancient as the times of Ambroſe, to be the ſpirit of wiſdom and of underſtanding; of wiſdom in ſpiritual matters; and of underſtanding of things which we are taught; the ſpirit of counſel, i. e. of prudently managing all our actions, and of ghoſtly ſtrength, i. e. of executing all our religious purpoſes; the ſpirit of knowledge to diſcern between good and evil, and the ſpirit of true godlineſs, i. e. of devotion in the ſervice of God; and finally the ſpirit of fear, or reverence towards God in all our actions.

Ver. 5. — The powers of the world to come.] i. e. Whatever is neceſſary to cenſure to us the inheritance of eternal glory in the world to come.

Ver. 6. —— They crucify, &c.] See the Introduction.

Ver. 10. —— Unrighteous.] Will not change, nor depart from his promiſe, to thoſe who love him and keep his commandments.

—— Your work and labour of love.] Which work and love is here explained in the cloſe of this verſe, viz. in that ye have miniſtred to the ſaints, and do miniſter to their neceſſities when you abound.

Ver. 11. — The ſame diligence.] In your work and labour of love.

Ver. 14. Saying.] In Gen. xxii. 16, 17.

Ver. 15. — Endured.] In himſelf and poſterity, many afflictions for God's ſake.

Ver. 16. — An oath for, &c.] See Exod. xxii. 11.

Ver. 17. The heirs of promiſe.] Of that Meſſiah and ſtate of ſalvation, which we now enjoy through Chriſt.

Ver. 18. — Two immutable things.] God's promiſe and his oath.

Ver. 20. — After the order, &c.] See chap. v. ver. 6, 10.

CHAP. VII.

1 Chriſt Jeſus is a prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec;
11 And ſo, far more excellent than the prieſts of Aaron's order.

FOR this Melchiſedec king of Salem, prieſt of the moſt high God, who met Abraham returning from the ſlaughter of the kings, and bleſſed him:

2 To whom alſo Abraham gave a tenth part of all: firſt being by interpretation king of righteouſneſs, and after that alſo king of Salem, which is, king of peace;

3 Without father, without mother, without deſcent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a prieſt continually.

4 Now conſider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the ſpoils.

5 And verily they that are of the ſons of Levi, who receive the office of the prieſthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loyns of Abraham:

6 But he whoſe deſcent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and bleſſed him that had the promiſes.

7 And without all contradiction, the leſs is bleſſed of the better.

8 And here men that die receive tithes: but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witneſſed that he liveth.

9 And as I may ſo ſay, Levi alſo who receiveth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loyns of his father, when Melchiſedec met him.

11 If therefore perfection were by the Levitical prieſthood (for under it the people received the law) what further need was there that another prieſt ſhould riſe after the order of Melchiſedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12 For the prieſthood being changed, there is made of neceſſity a change alſo of the law.

13 For he of whom theſe things are ſpoken, pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

14 For it is evident that our Lord ſprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moſes ſpake nothing concerning prieſthood.

15 And it is yet far more evident: for that after the ſimilitude of Melchiſedec there ariſeth another prieſt,

16 Who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endleſs life.

17 For he teſtifieth, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec.

18 For there is verily a diſannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof.

19 For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.

20 And in as much as not without an oath he was made prieſt,

21 (For thoſe prieſts were made without an oath: but this with an oath, by him that ſaid unto him, The Lord ſware, and will not repent, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec)

22 By ſo much was Jeſus made a ſurety of a better teſtament.

23 And they truly were many prieſts, becauſe they were not ſuffered to contiue by reaſon of death:

24 But this man, becauſe he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable prieſthood.

25 Wherefore he is able alſo to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them.

26 For ſuch an high-prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, and made higher than the heavens;

27 Who needeth not daily, as thoſe high-prieſts, to offer up ſacrifice, firſt for his own ſins, and then for the peoples: for this he did once, when he offered up himſelf.

28 For the law maketh men high-prieſts, which have infirmity; but the word of the oath which was ſince the law, maketh the Son, who is conſecrated for evermore.

Ver. 1 —— Melchiſedec king of Salem.] See Gen. xiv. 18, &c. and Mr. Saurin's Diſſertation on Melchiſedec, as alſo Calmet at the title Melchiſedec in his Dictionary. Yet note here, that Melchiſedec is interpreted the King of Righteouſneſs, ver. 2.

—— King of Salem.] i. e. King of Pace, ver. 2.

Ver. 3. —— Deſcent.] i. e. Pedigree in the books of Moſes.

—— Having neither beginning of days, nor end of life.] Not that there was ever any creature who could boaſt of this privilege; but the meaning hereof is, that Melchiſedec is deſcribed by Moſes, under a certain ſhadow of eternity, without making any mention either of his father or of his mother, of his birth, lineage or death.

Ver. 4. —— Unto whom, &c.] See Gen. xiv. 20.

Ver. 5. —— Have a commandment, &c.] See Numb. xviii. 21, 26.

Ver. 6. —— Deſcent.] Or, pedigree.

—— Them.] The ſons of Levi.

—— Promiſes.] That of his ſeed ſhould be born the Meſſiah, the Saviour of the world. See the notes on Matt. i.

Ver. 10. —— He.] i. e. This tribe of Levi.

Ver. 11. —— Perfection.] Or, a full ability to ſatisfy the juſtice of God. See the difference between the order of Melchiſedec's prieſts and thoſe called, as was Aaron in the notes on ch. v. and here below at ver. 15.

Ver. 12. —— Of the Law.] To which that prieſthood was annexed.

Ver. 13 —— He.] Jeſus Chriſt.

—— Another tribe.] Or, family in the Jewiſh nation, which was divided into twelve tribes.

—— Of which.] Tribe.

Ver. 14] Our Lord.] Jeſus Chriſt.

—— Out of Juda.] i. e. The tribe of Juda, Matt. i. 3. Luke iii. 23.

—— Concerning prieſthood.] Or, that the Levitical prieſthood ſhould be annexed thereto.

Ver. 15. —— Another prieſt.] Not converſant only about rites and ceremonies, after the law of a carnal commandment; but in ſpiritual things, preparing the inward man with the power of Divine Grace, that he may be able to conquer the world, fleſh and the devil, and to lay hold on everlaſting life, ver. 16.

Ver. 16. —— Carnal commandment.] Or, commandments inſtituted, and adapted to the weak capacities of that people, who could not be made perfect till the Meſſiah was come. See ver. 18, 19.

Ver. 17. —— After the order of Melchiſedec.] See ch. v. ver. 6.

Ver. 21. —— Said unto him.] In Pſal. cx. 4.

Ver. 24. —— This man.] Chriſt Jeſus; where the Apoſtle deſignedly reminds the Hebrews of his human nature, becauſe as God, he is above all, and conſequently ſuperior to kings and high-prieſts; but in his humanity, we are to look upon him as having both the royalty and prieſthood united together in his ſingle perſon, after the order of Melchiſedec. See what follows in the context to the end of the chapter.

Ver. 26, 27. —— Such an high prieſt, &c.] See the notes on ch. ix. 26.

CHAP. VIII.

1 By the eternal Prieſthood of Chriſt, the Levitical Prieſthood of Aaron is aboliſhed. 7 And the temporal covenant with the Fathers, by the eternal covenant of the Goſpel.

NOW of the things which we have ſpoken, this is the ſum: We have ſuch an high prieſt, who is ſet on the right hand of the throne of the Majeſty in the heavens.

2 A miniſter of the ſanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man.

3 For every high prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices: wherefore it is of neceſſity that this man have ſomewhat alſo to offer.

4 For if he were on earth, he ſhould not be a prieſt, ſeeing that there are prieſts that offer gifts according to the law:

5 Who ſerve unto the example and ſhadow of heavenly things, as Moſes was admoniſhed of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle. For ſee (ſaith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern ſhewed to thee in the mount.

6 But now hath he obtained a more excellent miniſtry, by how much alſo he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes.

7 For if that firſt covenant had been faultleſs, then ſhould no place have been ſought for the ſecond.

8 For finding fault with them, he ſaith, Behold, the days come (ſaith the Lord) when I will make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, and with the houſe of Judah:

9 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; becauſe they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, ſaith the Lord.

10 For this is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people.

11 And they ſhall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, ſaying, Know the Lord: for all ſhall know me, from the leaſt to the greateſt.

12 For I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

13 In that he ſaith, A new covenant, he hath made the firſt old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vaniſh away.

CHAP. IX.

1 The deſcription of the rites and bloody ſacrifices of the law, 11 far inferior to the dignity and perfection of the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt.

THEN verily the firſt covenant had alſo ordinances of divine ſervice, and a worldly ſanctuary.

2 For there was a tabernacle made, the firſt wherein was the candleſtick, and the table, and the ſhew-bread; which is called the ſanctuary.

3 And after the ſecond vail, the tabernacle which is called the holieſt of all:

4 Which had the golden cenſer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant;

5 And over it the cherubims of glory ſhadowing the mercy-ſeat; of which we cannot now ſpeak particularly.

6 Now when theſe things were thus ordained, the prieſts went always into the firſt tabernacle, accompliſhing the ſervice of God:

7 But into the ſecond went the high-prieſt alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himſelf, and for the errors of the people.

8 The holy Ghoſt this ſignifying, that the way into the holieſt of all was not yet made manifeſt, while as the firſt tabernacle was yet ſtanding:

9 Which was a figure for the time then preſent, in which were offered both gifts and ſacrifices, that could not make him that did the ſervice perfect, as pertaining to the conſcience,

10 Which ſtood only in meats and drinks, and divers waſhings, and carnal ordinances impoſed on them until the time of reformation.

11 But Chriſt being come an high-prieſt of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to ſay, not of this building;

12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entred in

---

Ver. 3. Every high-prieſt.] In the Jewiſh temple.

Ver. 4.—— If he.] Jeſus our high-prieſt, ver. 1.

—— He ſhould not be a prieſt.] He could not exerciſe that office in the temple, not being of the tribe of Levi, who only can offer gifts according to the law of Moſes.

Ver. 5.—— Saith he.] Moſes, in Exodus xxv. 40.

Ver. 6.—— Better covenant.] Than that through Moſes, between God and man.

—— Better promiſes.] Than thoſe of the Land of Canaan made to the Jews, becauſe, through Jeſus Chriſt, we are promiſed an eternal inheritance in the heavens.

Ver. 7.—— Firſt covenant.] By Moſes.

—— Second.] By Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 8.—— He ſaith.] Jer. xxxi. 31—34

once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

13 For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the aſhes of an heifer ſprinkling the unclean, ſanctifieth to the purifying of the fleſh;

14 How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God?

15 And for this cauſe he is the Mediator of the new teſtament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the tranſgreſſions that were under the firſt teſtament, they which are called might receive the promiſe of eternal inheritance.

16 For where a teſtament is, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death of the teſtator.

17 For a teſtament is of force after men are dead: otherwiſe it is of no ſtrength at all whilſt the teſtator liveth.

18 Whereupon, neither the firſt teſtament was dedicated without blood.

19 For when Moſes had ſpoken every precept to all the people, according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water and ſcarlet wool, and hyſſop, and ſprinkled both the book and all the people,

20 Saying, This is the blood of the teſtament which God hath enjoyned unto you.

21 Moreover, he ſprinkled likewiſe with blood both the tabernacle, and all the veſſels of the miniſtry.

22 And almoſt all things are by the law purged with blood; and without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion.

23 It was therefore neceſſary that the patterns of things in the heavens ſhould be purified with theſe; but the heavenly things themſelves with better ſacrifices than theſe.

24 For Chriſt is not entred into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven it ſelf, now to appear in the preſence of God for us:

25 Nor yet that he ſhould offer himſelf often, as the high-prieſt entreth into the holy place, every year with blood of others:

26 (For then muſt he often have ſuffered ſince the foundation of the world) but now once in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf.

27 And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment:

28 So Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many; and unto them that look for him ſhall he appear the ſecond time, without ſin, unto ſalvation.

Ver. 1. Ordinances of Divine Service.] i. e. Ceremonies in the worſhip of God.

——— Worldly ſanctuary.] i. e. A houſe of worſhip, which would, like all other worldly buildings, decay in time.

Ver. 2. —— The candleſtick.] See Exod. xxvi. 35.

——— The table, &c.] See Exod. xxv. 30. Levit. xxiv. 5, 6.

——— The ſanctuary.] Or, the Holy.

Ver. 3. —— The tabernacle, &c.] See Exod. xxvi. 31.

Ver. 4. —— The ark of the covenant, &c.] See Exod. xxv. 10. and xxvi. 33.

——— The golden pot that had manna.] See Exod. xvi. 33, 34.

——— Aaron's rod.] See Numb. xvii. 10.

——— The tables of the covenant.] Or, ten commandments delivered to Moſes on Mount Sinai. See Exod. xxv. 21. Deut. x. 2, 5. 1 kings viii. 9. 2 Chron. v. 10.

Ver. 5. —— The cherubims of gold, &c.] See Exod. xxv. 18—22.

——— Mercy-ſeat.] i. e. The covering of the ark of the covenant.

——— We cannot now ſpeak particularly.] Becauſe, as commentators generally interpret it, he has a greater matter, of weightier concern, to ſpeak of at preſent, but I apprehend the Apoſtle's meaning is, that as there was no remains of the cherubims, and ſome other things mentioned in the context, which had been proper to the firſt temple, and of which the Jewiſh nation had but confuſed ideas in the Apoſtle's days, he could give them no particular account, more than barely to recite that there had been ſuch things in the temple.

Ver. 6. —— Firſt tabernacle.] See Numb. xxviii. 3.

Ver. 7. —— Once.] i. e. Only once; ſee Exod. xxx. 10. and Levit. xvi. 2—15—34.

Ver. 9. — The ſervice.] Performed by the prieſt.

——— As pertaining to the conſcience.] i. e. As to the inward and ſpiritual man.

Ver. 10. Which.] Service, in ver. 9.

——— Meats, &c.] See Levit. xi. 2.

——— Waſhings, &c.] See Numb. xix. 2, &c.

——— Carnal ordinances.] Ceremonies that penetrated no further than the body, and in no wiſe cleanſed the ſoul; ſee ver. 13.

——— Reformation.] Of the Jewiſh nation from ſuperſtition and human invention, by Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 11. —— Not made with hands.] As the temple was.

Ver. 12. — The blood of goats and calves.] Which the high-prieſt uſed to offer for the expiation of the ſins of the people; ſee Levit. xvi. 14 Numb. ix. 2, 17, &c.

——— The holy place.] i. e. Heaven, of which the holy place in the temple was a figure.

——— Eternal redemption.] An expiation of ſin, and redemption from the wrath of God for ever.

Ver. 13. — If the blood of bulls and of goats.] See ver. 10. in the notes.

Ver. 14. How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, &c.] From hence to the end of the chapter the Apoſtle applies in a particular manner, what he has been remarking on the Jewiſh ſacrifices, to prove the reality of the ſacrifice, and the full ſatisfaction of Chriſt; and therefore, I will endeavour to explain his argument by,

A Diſſertation

A Diſſertation on the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of Chriſt.

The great impediments to ſalvation, till the coming of Chriſt, were the guilt and the dominion of ſin, the one made us obnoxious to the wrath of God, and the other, incapable of inheriting eternal life. Therefore,

God of his infinite goodneſs determined to ſend his ſon into the world, that by his death we might obtain remiſſion of ſins, and redemption from ſin and Satan, that our hearts and lives being reformed, we might be capable of eternal life and happineſs in the world to come. And,

We may account for this method of man's ſalvation from theſe conſiderations :

God could have pardoned mankind, out of his abundant mercy and powerful grace ; but amongſt other reaſons, it may be collected that he took this method of ſending his ſon in our nature, to take away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf.

Firſt, To vindicate the honour of his laws, which if ſin had gone altogether unpuniſhed would have been in great danger of falling into contempt. For if God had proclaimed a general pardon of ſin to all mankind, without any teſtimony of his wrath and diſpleaſure againſt it, who would have had any great veneration for his laws, or have believed in good earneſt that the violation of them had been either ſo extremely offenſive to him, or ſo very dangerous to the ſinner.

Therefore, to maintain the honour of his laws, or rather than ſin ſhould paſs unpuniſhed, God would lay the puniſhment of it upon his only begotten Son, the deareſt perſon to him in the world : Which is a greater teſtimony of his high diſpleaſure againſt ſin, and of his tender regard and concernment for the honour of his laws, than if the ſinner had ſuffered the puniſhment due to it in his own perſon.

Secondly, Another reaſon of this diſpenſation, and that likewiſe very conſiderable, was, that God might forgive ſin in ſuch a way as yet effectually to diſcountenance and diſcourage it, and to create in us the greateſt horror and hatred of it : Which could not have been an abſolute pardon, without any puniſhment inflicted, or ſatisfaction made to the honour of his juſtice. For had ſin been ſo eaſily forgiven, who would have been ſenſible of the great evil of it, or afraid to offend for the future ?

But when God makes his own Son a ſacrifice, and lays upon him the puniſhment due for the iniquities of us all, this is a demonſtration that God hates ſin as much, if it be poſſible, as he loved his own Son. For this plainly ſhews what ſin deſerves, and what the ſinner may juſtly expect, if, after this ſeverity of God againſt it, he will venture to commit it. And

If this ſacrifice for ſin, and the pardon purchaſed by it, be not effectual to reclaim us from ſin, and to beget in us an eternal dread and deteſtation of it : If we ſin wilfully after ſo clear a revelation of the wrath of God from Heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, there remains no more ſacrifice for ſin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation to conſume the adverſaries.

Thirdly, Another reaſon of this diſpenſation ſeems to have been a gracious condeſcenſion and compliance of Almighty God with a certain apprehenſion and perſuaſion, which had very early and univerſally obtained among mankind, concerning the expiation of ſin, and appeaſing the offended Deity by ſacrifices : By the ſacrifices of living creatures, of birds and beaſts ; and afterwards by human ſacrifices and the blood of their ſons and daughters : By offering to God, as the expreſſion is in the Prophet, their firſt-born for their tranſgreſſion, and the fruit of their body for the ſin of their ſouls.

And this notion of the expiation of ſin by ſacrifice, whether it had its firſt riſe from Divine Revelation, and was afterwards propagated from age to age by tradition : I ſay, from whence ſoever this notion came, it hath of all other notions concerning religion, excepting thoſe of the Being of God, and his Providence, and of the recompences of another life, found the moſt univerſal reception, and the thing hath been more generally practiſed in all ages and nations, and not only in the old, but in the new-diſcovered parts of the world. And

Indeed a very great part of the Jewiſh Religion, which was inſtituted by God himſelf, ſeems to have been a plain condeſcenſion to the general apprehenſion of mankind, concerning this way of appeaſing the offended Deity by ſacrifices : As it was alſo a figure of that great and efficacious ſacrifice which ſhould in due time be offered to God to make atonement once for all for the ſins of mankind. Therefore

The Apoſtle to the Hebrews doth very particularly inſiſt upon this condeſcenſion of God to them, in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel : And whereas they apprehended ſo great a neceſſity of an high prieſt and of ſacrifices to make expiation for the ſins of the people, that it was an eſtabliſhed principle among them, that without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion of ſins ; God was pleaſed to comply ſo far with theſe notions and apprehenſions of theirs, as to make his own Son both a prieſt and a ſacrifice, to do that once for all which their own high-prieſt pretended to do year by year, ver. 7. And

From hence the ſame Apoſtle takes occaſion to recommend to them the new covenant and diſpenſation of the Goſpel, as having a greater and more perfect high-prieſt and a more excellent ſacrifice, than were the high-prieſts and the ſacrifices under the law ; the " Son of God having by one ſacrifice of himſelf obtained eternal redemption for us, and perfected for ever them that are ſanctified."

And this apprehenſion prevailed no leſs in the Heathen world, and proceeded to the ſacrifices of men, of their firſt-born. And with this apprehenſion, not to countenance but to aboliſh it, God was pleaſed to comply ſo far as to make a general atonement for the ſins of mankind by the death of his ſon, appearing in our nature to become a voluntary ſacrifice for us : God permitting him to be unjuſtly put to death and his blood to be ſhed by the malice of men, in appearance as a malefactor, but in truth as a martyr ; and accepting of his death as a meritorious ſacrifice and propitiation for the ſins of the whole world : That by this wiſe counſel and permiſſion of his providence he might for ever put an end to that barbarous and inhuman way of ſerving God which had been ſo long in uſe and practice among them : The Son of God by the voluntary ſacrifice of himſelf having affected all that at once, and for ever, which mankind from the beginning of the world had in vain been endeavouring to accompliſh by innumerable and continual ſacrifices ? Namely, the pardon of their ſins ; and perfect peace and reconciliation with God.

For theſe ends and reaſons, and perhaps for many more as great and conſiderable as theſe which our ſhallow underſtandings are not able to fathom, the wiſdom of God hath pitched upon this way and method of delivering mankind from the guilt and dominion of ſin by the ſacrifice of his Son. And to this end it was requiſite that he ſhould appear in our nature and dwell amongſt us for ſome conſiderable time, that by a long courſe of the greateſt innocency and of the greateſt ſufferings in our nature, he might be capable of making a perfect expiation of ſin.

So that two things were requiſite to qualify him for this purpoſe ; perfect innocency and obedience, and great ſufferings in our nature, even to the ſuffering of death, both theſe the Scripture declares to be neceſſary qualifications of a perſon capable to make expiation of ſin ; and both theſe were found in the perſon of our Bleſſed Saviour.

Firſt, unſpotted innocency, and perfect obedience. This the Scripture teſtifies concerning him, and the whole courſe of his life and actions. He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without ſin, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, Heb. iv. 15. He always did the things which pleaſed God, John viii. 29. as he teſtifies concerning himſelf, and we are ſure that his witneſs is true. He did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth ; as Peter tells of him, 1 Pet. ii. 22. And this was neceſſary to qualify him for the perfect expiation of ſin, whether we conſider him as a prieſt, or as a ſacrifice.

As a prieſt he could not have been fit to make expiation for the ſins of others, had he not been without ſin himſelf. And this the Apoſtle tells us is one great advantage of our high-prieſt under the Goſpel, above the high-prieſt under the law, who being a ſinner himſelf, as well as thoſe for whom he offered, had need to offer for himſelf before he could make ſo much as a legal expiation for the ſins of others: But a perfect and effectual expiation of ſin, ſo as to purge the conſcience from the guilt of it, cannot be made but by an high-prieſt who is holy and innocent himſelf, For ſuch an high-prieſt, ſaith the Apoſtle, became us, Heb. vii. 26, 27. that is, now under the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, when a perfect expiation of ſins is to be made, ſuch an high-prieſt is neceſſary as is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, who needs not as thoſe high-prieſts, that is, as the high-prieſts under the law, to offer up ſacrifice firſt for his own ſins, and then for the people: The plain force of which argument is this, that he who will be qualified to make atonement for the ſins of others, muſt be without ſin himſelf.

Then if we conſider Chriſt as a ſacrifice for ſin, perfect holineſs is neceſſary to make a ſacrifice acceptable and available for the expiation of ſin. The neceſſity of this was typified by the quality of the expiatory ſacrifices under the law: The beaſts that were to be offered were to be without ſpot and blemiſh; to which the Apoſtle alludes, ſpeaking of the quality and efficacy of the ſacrifice of Chriſt: How much more, ſays he, ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who through the eternal Spirit offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſciences from dead works to ſerve the living God? Heb. ix. 14. And to the ſame purpoſe Peter, Foraſmuch as ye know ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, but with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. hereby intimating, that nothing leſs than the perfect innocency and holineſs of him who was to be a ſacrifice for us could have expiated the guilt of our ſins, and purchaſed eternal redemption for us.

Secondly, Great ſufferings likewiſe in our nature, even to the ſuffering of death, were requiſite to the perfect expiation of ſin: I ſay, even to the ſuffering of death; for, the ſacrifices which were to make expiation were to be ſlain. And it was a conſtant maxim and principle among the Jews, and the Apoſtle, more than once in this Epiſtle, ſeems to allow and confirm it, that without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion of ſins.

Not that God could not have pardoned ſin without ſatisfaction made to his juſtice, either by the ſuffering of the ſinner himſelf, or of a ſacrifice in his ſtead: But, according to the method and diſpenſation which the wiſdom of God had pitched upon, he was reſolved not to diſpenſe forgiveneſs in any other way. For which reaſon, he ſeems either to have poſſeſſed mankind with this principle, or to have permitted them to be ſo perſwaded, that ſin was not to be expiated but by blood, that is, either by death of the ſinner, or of the ſacrifice.

Now, the life of our Bleſſed Saviour, as well as his death, was made up of ſufferings of one kind or other: Continual ſufferings from his cradle to his croſs, from the time he drew his firſt breath to his giving up of the ghoſt; and not only continual ſufferings, but the greateſt that ever were, conſidered the dignity of the perſon that ſuffered, and the nature of the ſufferings: Conſidering likewiſe that theſe ſufferings were not only wholly undeſerved on his part, but unmerited alſo on ours, for whoſe ſake he ſubmitted himſelf to them: Nay, on the contrary, he had obliged to the utmoſt thoſe for whom and by whom he ſuffered, and continued ſtill to oblige them with the greateſt bleſſings and benefits purchaſed and procured for them by thoſe very ſufferings which with ſo much malice and cruelty they inflicted on him. And,

He voluntarily aſſuming and ſubmitting to the condition of humanity in its loweſt and moſt miſerable ſtate, ſin only excepted; and his being contented to live a life of doing good, and ſuffering evil, and at laſt to be put to death and ſlain a ſacrifice for us: The dignity of the perſon who did and ſuffered all for us, and his dearneſs to God, muſt needs add a mighty value to ſo perfect an obedience and ſuch patient ſufferings; ſo as to render them a full, perfect, and ſufficient ſacrifice, oblation and ſatisfaction for the ſins of the whole world. And,

All this being willingly performed in our nature, and accepted by God as done upon our account, may reaſonably be preſumed to redound to our benefit and advantage, as much as if we our ſelves had performed it in our own perſons: Nothing being ſo proper, and ſo available to make an honourable amends and ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God for the ſins of all mankind, as the voluntary obedience and ſufferings of human nature in a perſon of ſo great dignity and dearneſs to God, as his eternal and entirely beloved Son.

Now, that expiation of ſin was made by the ſufferings of Chriſt in our ſtead, I ſhall endeavour to make good: By,

I. Producing ſome plain teſtimonies of Holy Scripture, which declare this matter as clearly and fully as it is poſſible for words to do it; namely, that the Son of God, in order to the effectual expiation of ſin, ſuffered in our ſtead, and bore the wrath of God for us, and made a perfect atonement for ſin, and obtained eternal redemption for us.

This the Scripture declares to us in great variety of expreſſions; as, that Chriſt died for us, and for our ſins; that he was a ſacrifice for us, and a propitiation for the ſins of the whole world, that is, of all mankind; that he bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, and appeared to take away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf; that we are juſtified in his blood, and redeemed by the price of it; and in very many other expreſſions to the ſame purpoſe. And,

I will at preſent ſingle out ſome few of thoſe many texts of Scripture which might be produced to this purpoſe: He hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, 2 Cor. v. 21. that is, he hath made him who had no ſin himſelf, a ſacrifice for our ſins again; and walk in love, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us and given himſelf for us, an offering and a ſacrifice to God, Eph. v. 10. Peter, to the ſame purpoſe, tells us, that Chriſt alſo hath once ſince ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the fleſh, 1 Pet. i. 18. Here Chriſt is ſaid to have ſuffered for ſin; and to declare that the Apoſtle did not only mean that Chriſt ſuffered upon the occaſion of our ſins, but that he ſuffered in the place and ſtead of the ſinner, he adds, the juſt for the unjuſt, that is, the Son of God, who was innocent, and had no ſin, ſuffered for us who were ſinners; or, as it is elſewhere expreſſed, he bare our ſins in his own body on the tree.

It is true, indeed, that Chriſt ſuffered for our benefit and advantage which the Socinians would have to be all that is meant in the texts which I have cited: But then it ought to be conſidered, that Chriſt's ſuffering for our benefit and advantage does by no means exclude, nor is any wiſe inconſiſtent with his ſuffering in our ſtead. For, whoever ſuffers in another man's ſtead, and to ſave him from ſuffering, does undoubtedly ſuffer for his benefit and advantage, and gives the beſt demonſtration of it that can be: But the manner of the expreſſion, if compared with other parallel texts of Scripture, and eſpecially with what is ſo often ſaid of our Saviour's being a ſacrifice; I ſay, the manner of the expreſſion, if well conſidered, will appear to any man, that is not contentious, to ſignify our Saviour's ſuffering inſtead of the ſinner.

But, not to argue from words and phraſes, I will produce two texts which declare this matter ſo plainly, that the force of them is not to be avoided without the moſt ſhameful wreſting and perverting of them. This is my commandment, ſays our Saviour, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, John xv. 12. How is that? He declares in the next words. Greater love than this hath no man, that a man lay down his life for his friend, ver. 13. that is, that he be contented to die in his ſtead. And to the ſame purpoſe Paul, For when ye were ſinners, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly, Rom. vi. 6, 7, 8. Now, the queſtion is, whether by this expreſſion of Chriſt's dying for the ungodly, be meant only his dying for the benefit and advantage of ſinners, but not his dying in their ſtead? This, let the words which immediately follow determine: For ſcarcely for a righteous man will one die, yet peradventure for a good man one would even dare to die: But God commendeth his love to us, in that whilſt we were yet ſinners Chriſt died for us. And now I appeal to any man of good ſenſe, whether it be not plain that the Apoſtle here ſpeaks of Chriſt's dying for ſinners in the ſame ſenſe as one man is ſaid to die for another, that is, to ſave another from death; which, What is it elſe but to die in his ſtead? He that can deny this, is perverſe to the higheſt degree, and I fear almoſt beyond the poſſibility of being convinced.

It is evident then from Scripture, that Chriſt died not only for our advantage, but in our ſtead, as truly and really as any man ever did or can die for another, who lays down his own life to ſave another from death. For, if Chriſt had not died, we had periſhed everlaſtingly; and becauſe he died, we are ſaved from eternal death and miſery.

And though this be no where in Scripture ſpoken of by the name or term of ſatisfaction; yet it is ſaid to be the price of our redemption; which ſurely is the ſame thing in effect with ſatisfaction. For, as we are ſinners, we are liable, and, as I may ſay, indebted to the juſtice of God: And the Son of God, by his death and ſufferings in our nature, hath diſcharged this obligation, and paid this debt for us: Which diſcharge, ſince it was obtained for us by the ſhedding of Chriſt's blood; and the Scripture tells us, that without ſhedding of blood there is no remiſſion of ſins: And ſince God is graciouſly pleaſed to accept of it for the debt which we owed to his juſtice, and to declare himſelf fully pleaſed and contented with it, why it may not properly enough be called payment or ſatisfaction, I confeſs I am not able to underſtand.

Not that God was angry with his Son, when he thus laid on him the iniquities of us all: No, he was always well pleaſed with him; and never better, than when he "became obedient to the death, even the death of the croſs, and bore our ſins in his own body on the tree."

Nor yet that our Saviour ſuffered the very ſame that the ſinner ſhould have ſuffered, namely, the proper pains and torment of the damned: But that his obedience and ſufferings were of that value and eſteem with God, and his voluntary ſacrifice of himſelf ſo well-pleaſing to him, that he thereupon entred into a covenant of grace and mercy with mankind, wherein he hath engaged himſelf to forgive the ſins of thoſe who believe and repent, and to make them partakers of eternal life. And hence the blood of Chriſt which was ſhed for us upon the croſs is called the blood of the covenant, as being the ſanction of that new covenant into which God is entred with mankind: And not only the ſanction and confirmation of that covenant, but the very foundation of it: For which reaſon the cup in the Lord's Supper is called the New Teſtament, or as the word ſhould rather be rendred, the New Covenant in his blood which was ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins. Therefore I proceed now to ſhew,

IIdly, That the expiation of our ſins was made by the ſufferings of Chriſt, from the nature and intention of expiatory ſacrifices, both among the Jews and Heathen; to which the death of Chriſt is in the New Teſtament ſo frequently compared, and in point of virtue and efficacy to take away ſin infinitely preferred to it.

Now the nature and deſign of expiatory ſacrifices was plainly this: To ſubſtitute one living creature to ſuffer and die inſtead of another; ſo that what the ſinner deſerved to have ſuffered, was ſuppoſed to be done to the ſacrifice, that is, it was ſlain to make an atonement for the ſinner.

And though there was no reaſon to hope for any ſuch effect from the blood of bulls or of goats, or of any other living creatures that were wont to be offered up in ſacrifice; yet that both Jews and Heathens did expect and hope for it, is ſo very evident, that it cannot without extreme ignorance or obſtinacy be denied. But,

This expectation, how unreaſonable ſoever, plainly ſhews it to have been the common apprehenſion of mankind, in all ages, that God would not be appeaſed, nor ſhould ſin be pardoned without ſuffering: Yet ſo, that men generally conceived good hopes that upon the repentance of ſinners God would accept of a vicarious puniſhment, that is, of the ſuffering of ſome other in their ſtead. And very probably, as I ſaid before, in compliance with this apprehenſion of mankind, and in condeſcenſion to it, as well as for other weighty reaſons beſt known to the Divine Wiſdom, God was pleaſed to find out ſuch a ſacrifice as ſhould really and effectually procure for them that great bleſſing of the forgiveneſs of ſins, which they had ſo long hoped for from the multitude of their own ſacrifices.

And this Apoſtle to the Hebrews doth in a large diſcourſe ſhew the great virtue and efficacy of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, to the purpoſe of remiſſion of ſins, above that of the ſacrifices under the law: And that the death of Chriſt is really and effectually to our advantage all that which the ſacrifices under the law were ſuppoſed to be to the ſinner: But now once, ſaith the Apoſtle, in ver. 26. in the end of the world, hath he appeared to take away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf. This is the great virtue and efficacy of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, that whatever was expected from any other ſacrifices, either by Jews or Heathens, was really effected by this.

This was plainly ſignified by the Jewiſh paſſover, wherein the Lamb was ſlain, and the ſinner did eſcape and was paſſed by. In alluſion whereof Paul makes no ſcruple to call Chriſt our Paſſover or Paſchal Lamb, who was ſlain that we might eſcape: Chriſt our paſſover, ſays he, is ſlain or offered for us, 1 Cor. v. 7. that is, he by the gracious appointment of God was ſubſtituted to ſuffer all that in our ſtead which the Paſchal Lamb was ſuppoſed to ſuffer for the ſinner.

This was likewiſe ſignified by the ſinners laying his hand upon the ſacrifice that was to be ſlain, thereby as it were transferring the puniſhment which was due to himſelf upon the ſacrifice that was to be ſlain and offered up. For ſo God tells Moſes, that the ſinner who came to offer an expiatory ſacrifice, ſhould do: He ſhall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering, and it ſhall be accepted for him, to make an atonement for him, Lev. i. 4. And the Apoſtle tells us, that it was an eſtabliſhed principle in the Jewiſh religion, that without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion of ſins; which plainly ſhews, that they expected this benefit of the remiſſion of ſins from the blood of their ſacrifices.

Then he tells us, that we are really made partakers of this benefit, by the blood of Chriſt, and by the virtue of his ſacrifice: And again, Chriſt, ſays he, was once offered to bear the ſins of many, Heb. ix. 28. plainly alluding to the ſacrifices under the law, which did as it were, bear the faults of the ſinner.

And that this expreſſion, of Chriſt being offered to bear our ſins, cannot be meant by his taking away our ſins by his Holy Doctrine, which was confirmed by his death, but of his bearing our ſins by way of imputation, and by his ſuffering for them in our ſtead, as the ſacrifice was ſuppoſed to do for the ſinner: This, I ſay, is evident beyond all denial from the oppoſition which follows, in ver. 28. between his firſt appearance and his ſecond; Chriſt, ſays our Apoſtle, was once offered to bear our ſins, but unto them that look for him, he ſhall appear a ſecond time without ſin unto ſalvation. Why did he not appear the firſt time without ſin? Yes, certainly as to any inherent guilt; for the Scripture tells us, he had no ſin. What then is the meaning of the oppoſition, that at his firſt coming he bore our ſins, but at his ſecond coming, he ſhall appear without ſin unto ſalvation: Theſe words can have no other imaginable ſenſe but this; that at his firſt coming he ſuſtained the perſon of a ſinner, and ſuffered inſtead of us; but his ſecond coming ſhall be upon another account, and he ſhall appear without ſin unto ſalvation, that is, not as a ſacrifice, but as a judge, to confer the reward of eternal life upon thoſe who are partakers of the benefit of that ſacrifice which he offered to God for us in the days of his fleſh.

CHAP. X.

1 The weakneſs of the Law ſacrifices. 10 The ſacrifice of Chriſt's body once offered, 14 for ever, hath taken away ſins. 19 An exhortation to hold faſt the faith, with patience and thankſgiving.

FOR the law having a ſhadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with thoſe ſacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect.

2 For then would they not have ceaſed to be offered? becauſe that the worſhippers once purged, ſhould have had no more conſcience of ſins.

3 But in thoſe ſacrifices there is a remembrance again made of ſins every year.

4 For it is not poſſible that the blood of bulls and of goats ſhould take away ſins.

5 Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he ſaith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me:

6 In burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for ſin thou haſt had no pleaſure:

7 Then ſaid I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.

8 Above, when he ſaid, Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for ſin thou wouldſt not, neither hadſt pleaſure therein (which are offered by the law)

9 Then ſaid he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the firſt, that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond.

10 By the which will we are ſanctified, through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all.

11 And every prieſt ſtandeth daily miniſtring, and offering oftentimes the ſame ſacrifices, which can never take away ſins:

12 But this man after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſins, for ever ſat down on the right hand of God;

13 From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footſtool.

14 For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified.

15 Whereof the holy Ghoſt alſo is a witneſs to us: for after that he had ſaid before,

16 This is the covenant that I will make with them after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them:

17 And their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18 Now, where remiſſion of theſe is, there is no more offering for ſin.

19 Having therefore, brethren, boldneſs to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus,

20 By a new and living way which he hath conſecrated for us through the vail, that is to ſay, his fleſh;

21 And having an high prieſt over the houſe of God:

22 Let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of faith, having our hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, and our bodies waſhed with pure water.

23 Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering (for he is faithful that promiſed)

24 And let us conſider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works:

25 Not forſaking the aſſembling of our ſelves together, as the manner of ſome is; but exhorting one another: and ſo much the more, as ye ſee the day approaching.

26 For if we ſin wilfully after that, we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins,

27 But a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which ſhall devour the adverſaries.

28 He that deſpiſed Moſes law, died without mercy, under two or three witneſſes:

29 Of how much ſorer puniſhment ſuppoſe ye ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was ſanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done deſpite unto the Spirit of grace?

30 For we know him that hath ſaid, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompenſe, ſaith the Lord. And again, The Lord ſhall judge his people.

31 It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

32 But call to remembrance the former days, in which after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions:

33 Partly whilſt ye were made a gazingſtock, both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilſt ye became companions of them that were ſo uſed.

34 For ye had compaſſion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the ſpoiling of your goods, knowing in your ſelves, that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance.

35 Caſt not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompenſe of reward.

36 For ye have need of patience; that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promiſe.

37 For yet a little while, and he that ſhall come will come, and will not tarry.

38 Now the juſt ſhall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him.

39 But we are not of them who draw back into perdition; but of them that believe to the ſaving of the ſoul.

Ver. 1. — Of good things to come.] When the Meſſias ſhould appear, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, to be completed hereafter in the Heavenly Jeruſalem.

——— Not the very image.] Or, that perfect repreſentation of eternal happineſs, which was only roughly deſcribed, and appeared no better than a ſhadow under the law.

——— Year by year, &c.] See ch. ix. 7.

——— Perfect.] See ver. 14.

Ver. 2. For then they would not have ceaſed, &c.] Or rather, as it is in ſome copies in the Greek, Then they would have ceaſed to be offered, becauſe, &c.

——— No more conſcience of ſin.] That is, then the conſcience would no longer accuſe us of ſin before God, if thoſe ſacrifices had been able to do them away, or make an atonement to God for them; ſee ver. 11.

Ver. 4. —— That the blood of bulls, &c.] See chap. ix. 13.

Ver. 5. —— He ſaith.] In Pſ. xl. 6, &c. Iſa. i. 11. Jer. vi. 20. Amos v. 21.

——— A body.] i. e. An human body; ſee the Diſſertation at the end of ch. ix.

Ver. 12. This man.] Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 14. One offering.] Of himſelf; ſee the Diſſertation at the end of ch. ix.

Ver. 16. —— Saith the Lord, &c.] By Jer. xxxi. 33, 34.

Ver. 19. —— Boldneſs.] i. e. Liberty in the ſight of God.

——— The holieſt.] Heaven.

Ver. 20. — Conſecrated.] Or, now made.

Ver. 21. — The houſe of God.] i. e. The family of Chriſt's Church.

Ver. 22. — Waſhed with pure water.] In baptiſm; but here it muſt be obſerved, that the Apoſtle alludes to that of Ezek. xxxvi. 25.

Ver. 25. — The day.] Of our death.

Ver. 26. — There remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſin] See the Introduction.

Ver. 28. — Died without mercy.] See Deut. xvii. 2, 6 and xix. 15.

Ver. 29. — Trodden under foot, &c.] See the Introduction towards the latter end.

Ver. 30. — Said.] In Deut. xxxii. 35.

——— Again.] In Deut. xxxii. 36.

Ver. 31. — Into the hands of the living God.] Before we have repented of our ſins, or when we have trodden under foot the Son of God, &c. ver. 29. God's vengeance is fearful to the ſinner, but his mercy endureth for ever, and is kind and gracious to the true penitent. He will make examples of the reprobates, and reward the faith and works of the religious.

Ver. 32. — Illuminated.] By the light of the Goſpel.

——— Afflictions.] Becauſe ye believed in the croſs of Chriſt.

Ver. 35. — Will come.] Chriſt ſhall come at the time appointed of God, to judge every one according to their works, though it is ſaid, that

Ver. 36. —— The juſt ſhall live by faith.] See Rom. i. 17.

CHAP. XI.

1 What faith is. 6 Without faith we cannot pleaſe God. 7 The worthy fruits thereof in the fathers of old time.

NOW faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen.

2 For by it the elders obtained a good report.

3 Through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, ſo that things which are ſeen were not made of things which do appear.

4 By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witneſs, that he was righteous, God teſtifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead, yet ſpeaketh.

5 By faith Enoch was tranſlated, that he ſhould not ſee death; and was not found, becauſe God had tranſlated him: for before his tranſlation he had this teſtimony, that he pleaſed God.

6 But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him: for he that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him.

7 By faith Noah being warned of God of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the ſaving of his houſe; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith.

8 By faith Abraham when he was called to go out into a place which he ſhould after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whether he went.

9 By faith he ſojourned in the land of promiſe, as in a ſtrange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Iſaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the ſame promiſe.

10 For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God.

11 Through faith alſo Sarah her ſelf received ſtrength to conceive ſeed, and was delivered of a child when ſhe was paſt age, becauſe ſhe judged him faithful who had promiſed.

12 Therefore ſprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, ſo many as the ſtars of the ſky in multitude, and as the ſand which is by the ſea-ſhore innumerable.

13 Theſe all died in faith, not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them afar off, and were perſwaded of them, and embraced them, and confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14 For they that ſay ſuch things, declare plainly that they ſeek a country.

15 And truly if they had been mindful of that country, from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned :

16 But now they deſire a better country, that is, an heavenly : wherefore God is not aſhamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city.

17 By faith Abraham when he was tried, offered up Iſaac : and he that had received the promiſes, offered up his only begotten ſon :

18 Of whom it was ſaid, That in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called :

19 Accounting that God was able to raiſe him up, even from the dead ; from whence alſo he received him in a figure.

20 By faith Iſaac bleſſed Jacob and Eſau concerning things to come.

21 By faith Jacob when he was a dying, bleſſed both the ſons of Joſeph ; and worſhipped leaning upon the top of his ſtaff.

22 By faith Joſeph when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Iſrael ; and gave commandment concerning his bones.

23 By faith Moſes when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, becauſe they ſaw he was a proper child ; and they were not afraid of the kings commandment.

24 By faith Moſes when he was come to years, refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter ;

25 Chooſing rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon ;

26 Eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures in Egypt : for he had reſpect unto the recompenſe of the reward.

27 By faith he forſook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king ; for he endured, as ſeeing him who is inviſible.

28 Through faith he kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood, leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born ſhould touch them.

29 By faith they paſſed through the Red ſea as by dry land : which the Egyptians aſſaying to do, were drowned.

30 By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compaſſed about ſeven days.

31 By faith the harlot Rahab periſhed not with them that believed not, when ſhe had received the ſpies with peace.

32 And what ſhall I more ſay ? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samſon, and of Jephthae, of David alſo, and Samuel, and of the prophets :

33 Who through faith ſubdued kingdoms, wrought righteouſneſs, obtained promiſes, ſtopped the mouths of lions,

34 Quenched the violence of fire, eſcaped the edge of the ſword, out of weakneſs were made ſtrong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

35 Women received their dead raiſed to life again : and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance ; that they might obtain a better reſurrection.

36 And others had trial of cruel mockings, and ſcourgings, yea moreover, of bonds and impriſonment.

37 They were ſtoned, they were ſawn aſunder, were tempted, were ſlain with the ſword : they wandred about in ſheep-skins and goat-skins, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented :

38 (Of whom the world was not worthy) they wandred in deſerts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.

39 And theſe all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promiſe :

40 God having provided ſome better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be made perfect.

Ver. 1. —— The ſubſtance.] i. e. Ground, or, confidence.

Ver. 2. —— The elders.] Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and all the good men of the Church of God ſince the foundation of the world, as it is explained by the Apoſtle himſelf in the context to the end of the chapter.

Ver. 3 — By the word of God.] See Gen. i. 1 John i. 3. and Pſal. xxxiii. 6.

Ver. 4. —— Abel] See Gen. iv. 4—10.

—— Yet ſpeaketh.] Or, is now ſpoken of, or well reported of.

Ver. 5. — Enoch.] See Gen. v. 24. Wiſdom iv. 10. Ecclus. xliv. 16. and xlix. 14.

Ver. 7. —— Noah.] See Gen. vi. 13. Ecclus. xliv. 17.

—— Moved with fear.] Being wary.

—— Of the righteouſneſs which is by faith.] See Rom. iii. 22 and iv. 13.

Ver. 8 — Abraham.] See Gen. xii. 1—4.

—— Into a place.] The Land of Promiſe, or Canaan.

Ver. 11. —— Sara.] See Gen. xvii. 19. and xxi. 2.

Ver. 12. —— Him.] Abraham ; ſee Gen. xxii. 17. and Rom. iv. 19.

Ver. 13. —— In faith.] The original has it, according to faith, i. e. in that bleſſed ſtate, which at the redemption of the world would make them perfect with the ſaints of Chriſt ; ſee ver. 40.

—— Confeſſed that, &c.] See Gen. xxiii. 4. and xlvii. 9.

Ver. 14. —— A country] i. e. That their minds are not fixed upon their preſent ſtation, but that they look upon them as only in the way through this life to that heavenly country which God had promiſed. See ver. 16.

Ver. 17. —— Offered up Iſaac.] See Gen. xxii. 1—9.

Ver. 18. Of whom.] Or, to whom. See Gen. xxi. 12.

Ver. 19. —— That God was able] See Rom. iv. 17—19—21.

Ver. 20. —— Iſaac bleſſed Jacob, &c.] See Gen. xxvii. 27—39.

Ver. 21. —— Jacob, &c.] See Gen xlviii. 5. 16—20.

—— Worſhipped.] See Gen. xlvii. 31.

Ver. 22. Joſeph when he died.] See Gen. l. 24.

Ver. 23. —— Moſes when he was born.] See Exod. ii. 2—10, 11. and i. 16—22.

Ver. 26. —— Reproach of Chriſt] Or, for Chriſt.

Ver. 27. —— Forſook Egypt.] See Exod. x. 28, 29 and xiii. 17, 18.

—— Seeing him.] i. e. God.

Ver. 28. —— Kept the Paſſover.] See Exod. xii. 21, &c.

Ver. 29. —— Paſſed through the Red-ſea.] See Exod. xiv. 22.

Ver. 30. —— The walls of Jericho.] See Joſhua vi. 20.

Ver. 31. —— Rahab.] See Joſhua vi. 20.

Ver. 33. —— Stopped the mouths of Lions.] See Judges xiv. 5. 1 Sam. xvii. 34. Dan. vi. 22.

Ver. 34. —— Quench the violence of fire.] —— See Dan. iii. 25.

—— Eſcaped the edge of the ſword.] 1 Sam. xx. 7. 1. 1 Kings xix. 3. 2 Kings vi. 16.

—— Out of meekneſs, &c.] See See 2 Kings xx. Job xlii. 10. Pſal. vi. 8.

Ver. 35. Women received their dead raiſed to life again.] See 1 Kings xvii. 22. 2 Kings iv. 35.

—— Others were tortured, not, &c.] See 2 Mac. vi. 19—28. and vii. 7, &c.

Ver. 36. And others, &c.] See 2 Mac. vii. 1—7. and Jer. xx. 2.

Ver. 37. They were ſtoned, &c.] 1 Kings xxi. 13.

—— They wandered about, &c.] See 1 Kings i. 8. and Zech. xiii. 4.

Ver. 38. —— In dens, &c.] As David did. See 1 Kings xviii. 4.

Ver. 40. —— For us.] i. e. Chriſtians.

—— That they.] The faithful mentioned in this chapter.

—— Perfect.] In the glory of God the Father, which could not be obtained but through the ſatisfaction to the Divine Juſtice for the ſin of our firſt parents, which was to be done away by the promiſed ſeed, Gen. iii. 15.

CHAP. XII.

1 An exhortation to conſtant faith, patience, and godlineſs. 22 A commendation of the New Teſtament above the Old.

WHerefore, ſeeing we alſo are compaſſed about with ſo great a cloud of witneſſes, let us lay aſide every weight and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us, and let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us,

2 Looking unto Jeſus the author and finiſher of our faith; who for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3 For conſider him that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, leſt ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

4 Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood, ſtriving againſt ſin.

5 And ye have forgotten the exhortation which ſpeaketh unto you, as unto children, My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him.

6 For whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth.

7 If ye endure chaſtning, God dealeth with you as with ſons: for what ſon is he whom the father chaſtneth not?

8 But if ye be without chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons.

9 Furthermore, we have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection unto the Father of ſpirits, and live?

10 For they verily for a few days chaſtned us after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs.

11 Now no chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheleſs, afterward it yieldeth the peaceful fruit of righteouſneſs unto them which are exerciſed thereby.

12 Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees.

13 And make ſtraight paths for your feet, leſt that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed.

14 Follow peace with all men, and holineſs, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord:

15 Looking diligently, leſt any man fail of the grace of God; leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled:

16 Leſt there be any fornicator, or profane perſon, as Eſau, who for one morſel of meat ſold his birth-right.

17 For ye know how that afterward when he would have inherited the bleſſing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he ſought it carefully with tears.

18 For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackneſs, and darkneſs, and tempeſt,

19 And the ſound of a trumpet, and the voice of word, which voice they that heard, intreated that the word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more:

20 (For they could not endure that which was commanded, And if ſo much as a beaſt touch the mountain, it ſhall be ſtoned, or thruſt through with a dart.

21 And ſo terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake.)

22 But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jeruſalem, and to an innumerable company of angels.

23 To the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect,

24 And to Jeſus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of ſprinkling, that ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel.

25 See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh: For if they eſcaped not who refuſed him that ſpake on earth, much more ſhall not we eſcape, if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh from heaven:

26 Whoſe voice then ſhook the earth: but now he hath promiſed, ſaying, Yet once more I ſhake not the earth only, but alſo heaven.

27 And this word, Yet once more, ſignifieth the removing of thoſe things that are ſhaken, as of things that are made, that thoſe things which cannot be ſhaken may remain.

28 Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may ſerve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear.

29 For our God is a conſuming fire.

Ver. 1. Cloud of witneſſes.] Who, having teſtified their faith in the promiſes, ſet us an example to do the like, even to perſevere in the faith of the promiſes made to us by Chriſt, through temptations and perſecutions to death itſelf, as they in the xith chapter, are recorded to have done.

—— Let us run, &c.] See this phraſe or metaphor explained in 1 Cor. ix. 24.

Ver. 2. — The author and finiſher of our faith.] i.e. We muſt confine our faith within the covenant of Chriſt, for he has delivered all that we are obliged to believe; and therefore, there is no need for us of the ſeed of Abraham, to retain any of the Levitical ceremonies, as a part of duty under the Chriſtian-diſpenſation.

—— Endured the croſs.] Yielded to be crucified; ſee Luke xxiv. 26. and Philip. ii. 8.

Ver. 3. — Faint in your minds] Or, In your courage and reſolutions in the day of temptation and trials, when perſecution cometh for the name of Chriſt; ſee ch. x. 33, 34.

Ver. 4. Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood.] The perſecutor does not yet ſtrike at your lives, but only ſpoils, or confiſcates your goods; ſee ch. x. 34.

—— Striving againſt ſin.] i. e. By which nevertheleſs, you prove yourſelves faithful; for that you rather willingly part with your goods, than fall into the damnable ſin of apoſtacy, by ſaving your goods at the price of that faith, which you have embraced in Chriſt Jeſus; ſee ver. 15.

Ver. 5. —— The exhortation which ſpeaketh, &c.] In Proverbs iii. 11, &c.

Ver. 11. — To be joyous, but grievous.] i. e. To be for our comfort, but rather to puniſh us.

—— The peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs.] i. e. A juſt reformation, inſtruction and amendment, joined with a ſpiritual repoſe of the ſoul, oppoſite to all manner of trouble and compaſſion of the fleſh in afflictions.

Ver. 12. — Lift up the hands, &c.] i. e. Be of good courage, be not faint-hearted.

Ver. 14. — Without which.] i. e. Peace, and holineſs; ſee Matt. v. 8.

—— No man ſhall ſee the Lord.] Or, man cannot expect to enter into the preſence and glory of the Lord, who has not, as much as in his power, lived peaceably with all men, and preſerved a conſcience void of offence, or has not repented, while it is to day, of the evil of his ways, and turned unto the Lord.

Ver. 15. — Fail of the grace of God.] Or, fall from that grace of God which has called them unto that ſtate of ſalvation, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

—— Root of bitterneſs.] i. e. A foundation of ſtriſe, or ſome erroneous doctrine be introduced among you, which like a venemous plant will corrupt the tender plants and ſhoots in the vineyard of Chriſt.

—— Trouble you.] Raiſe in you needleſs ſcruples and contentions.

—— Defiled.] Or, may be corrupted from the true faith.

Ver. 16. Leſt there be any fornicator, &c.] Here the Apoſtle ſhews, that we are not only to beware of falſe doctrine, and of them that teach it; but alſo, that we are to be upon our guard againſt the vices of a corrupt age, which if we do not reſiſt will alſo defile us. And therein plainly ſhews his opinion, that though we live in the faith, yet that faith will not avail, unleſs it be accompanied with a good conſcience, and a ſincere practice of our faith.

—— Sold his birth-right.] See Gen. xxv. 33. xxvii. 36, 38.

Ver. 18. — The mount.] Sinai; ſee Exod. xix. 12—18, 19.

Ver. 19. — They.] The Iſraelites; ſee Exod. xx. 19.

Ver. 20. — It ſhall be ſtoned, &c.] See Exod. xix. 13.

Ver. 21. — Moſes ſaid.] In Exod. xix. 16.

Ver. 22. — Ye.] Who have embraced the faith of Chriſt.

—— Unto mount Sion.] i. e. The Chriſtian Church, which is here, and in other places of the New Teſtament, figuratively ſignified by Mount Sion, and Jeruſalem, which are oppoſite to Mount Sinai; ſee Gal. iv. 26.

———— Company of Angels.] Or, to be in communion with Angels and Saints, (ſee the next verſe) for as the Apoſtle writes to the Epheſians, they are a part of the body of the Church, Eph. i. 10.

Ver. 23. — General aſſembly.] Of Angels and of the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, which together with the juſt upon earth make up the Church of Chriſt, who is the firſt man that was born without ſin.

Ver. 24. — Covenant.] Or, Teſtament.

———— Blood of ſprinkling.] Alluding to that of Exod. xxiv. 8.

———— Than that of Abel.] See Gen. iv. 10. The meaning of which compariſon is this: I would adviſe you to look upon the blood, which I tell you Chriſt has ſhed for man, not as crying for, and bringing down vengeance upon the blood-thirſty Jews, who murdered their Meſſiah, as Abel's blood did againſt Cain, his murderer; but as a propitiatory ſacrifice, making an atonement for the ſins of the whole world, and including, as many of them as will embrace his faith, in the favour and pardon of his Heavenly Father.

Ver. 25. —— Him that ſpeaketh.] Jeſus Chriſt, who ſpeaketh from Heaven.

—— Him that ſpeaketh on earth.] This was Moſes; ſee Exod. xix. 18.

Ver. 26. — He hath promiſed.] By the Prophet Haggai, ii. 6.

Ver. 27. —— That are ſhaken.] Or, that may be ſhaken.

Ver. 28 — Let us have grace.] Or, Let us hold faſt the doctrine, which entitles us to the grace of God.

Ver. 29 — Our God is a conſuming fire.] Conſidered in regard of his juſtice, before he ſhewed us grace and mercy through Jeſus Chriſt; ſee Exod. xxiv. 17. Deut. iv. 24. and ix. 3.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Divers admonitions, as to charity, 4 To honeſt life, 5 To avoid covetouſneſs. 7 To regard Gods preachers, 9 To take heed of ſtrange doctrines, 10 To confeſs Chriſt. 16 To give alms, 17 To obey governors, 18 To pray for the Apoſtle. 20 The concluſion.

LET brotherly love continue.

2 Be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers: for thereby ſome have entertained angels unawares.

3 Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being your ſelves alſo in the body.

4 Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.

5 Let your converſation be without covetouſneſs; and be content with ſuch things as ye have: for he hath ſaid, I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee.

6 So that we may boldly ſay, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man ſhall do unto me.

7 Remember them which have the rule over you, who have ſpoken unto you the word of God: whoſe faith follow, conſidering the end of their converſation.

8 Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever.

9 Be not carried about with divers and ſtrange doctrines: for it is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein.

10 We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat, which ſerve the tabernacle.

11 For the bodies of thoſe beaſts whoſe blood is brought into the ſanctuary by the high prieſt for ſin, are burnt without the camp.

12 Wherefore Jeſus alſo, that he might ſanctify the people with his own blood, ſuffered without the gate.

13 Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach.

14 For here have we no continuing city, but we ſeek one to come.

15 By him therefore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name.

16 But to do good, and to communicate, forget not: for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed.

17 Obey them that have the rule over you, and ſubmit your ſelves: for they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give account: that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you.

18 Pray for us: for we truſt we have a good conſcience, in all things willing to live honeſtly.

19 But I beſeech you the rather to do this, that I may be reſtored to you the ſooner.

20 Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great ſhepherd of the ſheep, through the blood of the everlaſting covenant.

21 Make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

22 And I beſeech you, brethren, ſuffer the word of exhortation; for I have written a letter unto you in few words.

23 Know ye that our brother Timothy is ſet at liberty; with whom, if he come ſhortly, I will ſee you.

24 Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the ſaints. They of Italy ſalute you.

25 Grace be with you all. Amen.

¶ Written to the Hebrews from Italy, by Timothy.

Ver. 1. Let brotherly love continue.] Between the proſelytes from Judaiſm and Gentiliſm. See Rom. xii. 10. 1 Pet. i. 22. and ii. 17. and iv. 8.

Ver. 2. —— Some have entertained angels.] See Gen. xviii. 3. and xix. 2.

—— Unawares.] Unexpectedly, not foreſeeing.

Ver. 3. Remember them.] i. e. Relieve them as far as in your power, and be always mindful of them in your prayers, publick or private.

Ver. 4. Marriage is honourable in all.] See my Diſſertation on celibacy in 1 Cor. vii.

Ver. 5 —— Converſation.] Or, commerce.

Ver. 6. —— We may boldly ſay.] As the Pſalmiſt hath taught us, Pſal. lvi. 4—11, 12. and cxviii. 6.

Ver. 7. Remember.] See ver. 3. in the notes.

—— Whoſe faith follow, &c.] Who have rather choſen to ſuffer death itſelf, than forſake the vocation whereunto ye are called.

Ver. 8 Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever.] And now, ſays the Apoſtle, I muſt remind you, that there is now the ſame danger of falling from the faith of Chriſt, and the ſame rewards for perſevering therein, and the ſame grace aſſiſting and ſtrengthening thoſe who undergo temptations and afflictions for his ſake, as there has been ſhewn in times paſt; and ſo I can avouch, it will continue to the end of the world. Therefore, be not, &c. as it follows,

Ver. 9. Be not carried about, &c.] Or, perſwaded to change your belief.

——— Strange.] Or, unknown in the Church of Chriſt. See Eph. iv. 14. and v. 6.

——— With grace.] Or, the ſpiritual ſervice of God.

——— Not with meats.] Or, the ceremonies of the law. See Diodati in Loc. and Rom. xiv, 17. Col. ii. 16. 1 Tim. iv. 3.

Ver. 10. We.] Chriſtians. See 1 Cor. x. 18.

——— They] The Jews unconverted, who remain in the ſervice of the tabernacle, offering up the bodies of beaſts.

Ver. 12. ——— Suffered without the gate.] See John xix. 17, 18. and Acts vii. 58.

Ver. 13. ——— Bearing his reproach.] i. e. Bearing reproach for his ſake. See ch. xi. 26.

Ver. 14. ——— Here.] On earth.

——— No continuing city.] Not an everlaſting ſtate or manſion.

Ver. 15. By him.] Or, through him, or through the ſacrifice of his blood.

——— The ſacrifice of praiſe.] Is, as it follows, the fruit of our lips.

——— The fruit of our lips.] Is a confeſſion of the ſteadfaſtneſs of our faith, and the rectitude of our conſcience.

——— Giving thanks to.] Or, as it is in the Greek, confeſſing our belief in his name.

Ver. 16. ——— Communicate.] Part of our ſubſtance.

Ver. 17. ——— That have the rule over you.] In the Church of Chriſt.

——— The watch for your ſouls.] See Ezek. iii. 17. and xxxiii. 2—7. and my Diſſertation on the prieſthood.

——— Not with grief.] To ſee you reprobate, neglecting their inſtructions, and contemning their perſons.

Ver. 19. ——— Rather to do this.] Or, make this the chiefeſt part of your prayer for me, that I may be reſtored to you ſoon.

Ver. 20.] That great ſhepherd of the ſheep.] Mentioned by Iſaiah, ch. xl. ver. 11. and by Ezek. xxxiv. 23.

Ver. 22. ——— Suffer the word of exhortation.] Or, take my exhortation in good part.

Ver. 24. ——— All them that have the rule over you.] i. e. Your miniſters in the Church.

——— All the ſaints.] Or, all they who continue to aſſemble themſelves with the Church of God.

——— They of Italy.] i. e. The faithful who live in Italy, though unknown, ſalute you, or bid you Godſpeed in the labour of the Lord.

Ver. 25. Grace be with you all.] Or, God bleſs you all.

——— Amen.] i. e. That is my hearty deſire, and ſo be it.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

GENERAL EPISTLE

OF

JAMES.

The INTRODUCTION.

The perſon to whom this Epiſtle is aſcribed by the ancients, as Dr. Cave obſerves in his life, to James the Leſs, one of the twelve Apoſtles, and called the brother of our Lord, in Matt. xiii. 55. and Gal. i. 19. either becauſe he was, as many of the ancients teſtify, the ſon of Joſeph by a former wife; (ſee Dr. Cave in his life, and Biſhop Pearſon on the Creed, Art. III.) or, becauſe near related to the Virgin Mary, it being a cuſtom among the Jews to call their relations brethren; ſee Buxtorf and Huetius.

He is called James the Leſs, to diſtinguiſh him from the other James, whom Herod beheaded; and after our Saviour's aſcenſion, Euſebius (Hiſt. l. 2. c. 1. ſays, he was Biſhop of Jeruſalem; ſee Cave, ibid. But this holy man was not content to take care of the Chriſtians only in and about Jeruſalem, but alſo ſent this Epiſtle to the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad, or that were diſperſed into other parts; and therefore, it is called a General Epiſtle, the copies thereof being handed up and down in ſeveral places. Some of the admonitions in this Epiſtle ſeem to be intended for all the diſperſed Iſraelites, or the twelve tribes in general; but the moſt for thoſe of them who were converted Chriſtians, and who lived intermixed with their brethren, who were not converted. And,

Becauſe the zealous Chriſtians were conſtantly liable to ſundry perſecutions and troubles, eſpecially, from their old enemies, the unbelieving Jews, the Apoſtle in the beginning of this Epiſtle, exhorts them to patience under all their troubles; as being trials of the ſincerity of their faith, and what would be recompenſed with a crown of life. Again,

The Chriſtian Religion being in danger of being abuſed by the looſe doctrines of ſome pretended Chriſtians and hereticks, who wreſting Paul's doctrine of juſtification by faith only, i. e. without the pretence of merit, or the works of the ceremonial law, pretended that they might do what they liſt, and encouraged men to depend on a naked belief of Chriſt's Religion, as if faith would ſave them without holineſs and good works; (ſee Irenæus, lib. 1. c. 20. and Dr. Mill's Prolegom. p. 7.) The Apoſtle therefore cautions the Chriſtians, and preſſes the renouncing of all impiety and filthy luſts; and alſo warns them againſt a dependance on a partial obſervance only of God's laws, againſt deſpiſing the poor, ſtriſe and envying, covetous deſires, bitter words, pride, a dependance on, and confidence in this world, forgetting the uncertainty of this life, and a hearing the word without doing it; and, on the other hand, exhorts to the practice of Chriſtian virtues, ſuch as kindneſs, mutual love, peaceableneſs, humility, &c. and, in general, proves that a bare faith without charity, and ſuch other good works as the Goſpel requires, is dead and worth nothing: He inſtances in Abraham, their forefather, who was juſtified, not only by his faith in believing God's promiſe, but alſo by his works, which proceeded from that faith, when he obeyed God in offering his ſon Iſaac; ſo alſo Rahab was juſtified not only by her faith in believing that the Lord had given the Iſraelites the land of Canaan, but by her works in preſerving the meſſengers who were ſent to ſpy it out, Joſh. ii.

The wars and fightings, ch. iv. 1. ſeem more eſpecially to note the factions, mutinies, and uproars among the Jews of that age in general, who, pretending to be a free people, could not eaſily bear ſubjection under the Romans, or any others; ſuch mutinyings occaſioned many maſſacres among them, as Joſephus ſhews; and moſt likely, ſome who called themſelves Chriſtians, were carried away with the common prejudices of that people in general, and might too much countenance the tumults ſo frequent among the whole body of the Jews.

In the beginning of the fifth chapter, the Apoſtle ſeems to tax the unbelieving Jews for their covetous hoarding, oppreſſions and perſecutions of the Chriſtians; and to threaten them with Chriſt's ſpeedy coming to execute judgment on them, when they ſhould be miſerable, and ſpoiled of all their treaſures, as it came to paſs not long afterwards; and thence he encouraged the true Chriſtians to be patient, and to wait for deliverance, and occaſionally charged them to avoid that evil Jewiſh cuſtom of ſwearing by Heaven and Earth, &c. in their ordinary converſations. And Then finally, at ver. 13. he begins to inſtruct them what to do in the multitude of the various accidents of this life: He bids them pray, if they are afflicted; to praiſe God in proſperity; in the time of ſickneſs to ſend for the Elders, the Biſhops, or Presbyters of the Church, that they might have the benefit both of their prayers, for the forgiveneſs of their ſins, and alſo of the anointing with oil in the name of the Lord Jeſus, which being added to the prayer, would by an extraordinary gift in thoſe primitive times, when there was need of miracles or ſigns to confirm the word preached, miraculouſly heal diſeaſes, ſee Mark vi. 13. Sick perſons were alſo ordered to confeſs their faults to one another, or acknowledge thoſe ſins, which were accidental to, or the occaſion of their ſickneſs, in order to procure ſuch prayers of the righteous, as might obtain their forgiveneſs in the ſight of God, that they might recover; which particulars I ſhall conſider more ſtrictly in the notes in their proper texts.

CHAP. I.

1 We are to rejoice under the croſs, 5 To ask wiſdom of God, 13 And in our trials not to impute our weakneſs, or ſins unto him, 19 but rather to hearken to the word, to meditate in it, and to do thereafter. 26 Otherwiſe men may ſeem, but never be truly religious.

JAMES a ſervant of God, and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to the twelve tribes which are ſcattered abroad, greeting.

2 My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations.

3 Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience.

4 But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

5 If any of you lack wiſdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it ſhall be given him.

6 But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth is like a wave of the ſea, driven with the wind and toſſed.

7 For let not that man think that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord.

8 A double-minded man is unſtable in all his ways.

9 Let the brother of low degree rejoyce in that he is exalted:

10 But the rich, in that he is made low: becauſe as the flower of the graſs he ſhall paſs away.

11 For the ſun is no ſooner riſen with a burning heat, but it withereth the graſs, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the faſhion of it periſheth: ſo alſo ſhall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12 Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he ſhall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him.

13 Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man.

14 But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed.

15 Then when luſt hath conceived, it bringeth forth ſin: and ſin when it is finiſhed, bringeth forth death.

16 Do not err, my beloved brethren.

17 Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning.

18 Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we ſhould be a kind of firſt-fruits of his creatures.

19 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath.

20 For the wrath of man worketh not the righteouſneſs of God.

21 Wherefore lay apart all filthineſs, and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, and receive with meekneſs the engrafted word, which is able to ſave your ſouls.

22 But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſelves.

23 For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glaſs:

24 For he beholdeth himſelf, and goeth his way, and ſtraightway forgetteth what manner of man he was.

25 But whoſo looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man ſhall be bleſſed in his deed.

26 If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this mans religion is vain.

27 Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, To viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction, and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world.

Ver. 1. — The twelve tribes.] See Acts xxvi. ver. 7. Deut. xxxii. 26. John vii. 35. Acts viii. 1. and my Introduction to the Acts of the Apoſtles, and Diſſertation on the ſtate of the Jews out of Judea.

Ver. 2. My brethren.] Or, as many of you as have embraced the faith of Chriſt.

Ver. 3. — Temptations.] Or, trials of your faith, ver. 3. and 12. ſuch as are mentioned in Heb. xi. throughout, eſpecially at ver. 33, &c.

Ver. 4. — Wanting nothing.] Neither faith nor works, to make you happy and co-heirs with Chriſt.

Ver. 5. — Wiſdom.] A capacity to judge what is right and ſound doctrine, neceſſary for the ſaving of your ſouls; ſee the Diſſertation at the end of this chapter.

Ver. 6. — Nothing wavering.] Without preſumptious or blaſphemous thoughts, for they that are deſirous to know or learn their duty from the Word of God, muſt neither preſume that they are all-ſufficient of themſelves to ſearch into his will, and to do it without earneſt prayer for the Divine Aſſiſtance; nor accuſe it, as the manner of ſome is, of contradictions, nor lay it aſide and diſregard it, becauſe there are ſome things therein hard to be underſtood; nor employ their wits to ſearch out thoſe things, which neither concerns them to know, nor can be comprehended by human capacities, as being above our underſtandings. And whoever is guilty of any of theſe particulars, is properly ſaid to waver like a wave of the ſea, &c. and ſuch a one is a double-minded man, willing to ſhew a form of godlineſs, but in his heart is attached to the world and his own carnal inventions, and opinions, ver. 8. and therefore, it follows at ver. 7. that ſuch a man cannot think of receiving any thing (wiſdom or knowledge) of the Lord.

Ver. 9. — In that he, &c.] i. e. When he may be exalted.

Ver. 10. — In that he, &c.] i. e. Whenſoever he ſhall be brought low.

——— Paſs away.] i. e. Die; ſee Job xiv. 2.

Ver. 12. — Which the Lord hath promiſed.] i. e. Which the Lord Jeſus hath promiſed in Matt. x. 22. xix. 28, 29.

Ver. 13. — Tempted with evil.] Or, to do evil.

Ver. 19. Swift.] Ready, very earneſt.

——— Slow.] Backward, not prone or given to much babling, or to anger; ſee Eccleſ. v. 1. Prov. xvii. 27. Eccleſ. vii. 9.

Ver. 21. Engrafted word.] i. e. That Revelation by Jeſus Chriſt, which is engrafted into the Revelation of God by Moſes, which ye in former times had for your only rule of faith.

Ver. 25. — Perfect law of liberty.] viz. the Goſpel.

Ver. 26. — Bridleth not his tongue.] Or, is not ſlow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath; ſee ver. 19. and Pſ. xxxiv. 13. and xxxix. 1. 1 Pet. iii. 10.

Ver. 27. — Is this.] According to Matt. xxvi. 35. and 1 John v. 18.

A Diſſertation on Wiſdom, or Prudence.

Wiſdom is that act or habit of the underſtanding, whereby we judge what is fit, or unfit, to the end things are deſigned for. Which is on one hand oppoſite to craft, and, on the other hand, to folly. And therefore,

The Apoſtle in the fifth verſe of this chapter, ſuppoſes the neceſſity of this wiſdom, or prudence, to a good life, and conſequently to our happineſs, when he exhorts his brethren to aſk it of God. And,

I ſhall from thence ſhew its neceſſity for that purpoſe, for we can do nothing that is good in order to our happineſs, as we ought to do, without it. And,

This will oblige me to conſider the ſin and danger of craft and of folly. And,

The means preſcribed for the obtaining, and the motives urged for the due performance of this duty, to acquire wiſdom. And therefore,

I. The neceſſity of wiſdom to a good life, &c. appears thus: If we cannot now do any good to perfection, yet we muſt do what we can towards it, we muſt perform our duty as well, in all reſpects, and as perfectly as we can, in order to our happineſs. My meaning is, that ſince there may be various ways of doing any good required of us, it is our duty to conſider which of thoſe ways it may be beſt and moſt effectually done; and to pitch upon that way of doing it, by which, all circumſtances duly weighed, we may moſt promote the ends, for which we are required to perform it.

There may be ſeveral things as neceſſary to a right performance of our duty, as the duty is itſelf, which we are required to perform: And if we do not carefully attend to all thoſe things, ſo as wiſely to diſpoſe them to a right performance of the duty to which they are related, we may do the duty literally, and yet be very far from having done it as we ought to do it, becauſe not ſo as to promote the end, for which it is preſcribed. And not to do our duty ſo, that is, in ſuch a manner, as we know to be moſt conducive to the great, and good, and happy ends, for which it is required of us, is much the ſame as if we did it not at all; becauſe we can have no juſt ground to hope that we ſhall be any way advantaged by ſo doing of it.

Now wiſdom, as I have before defined it to be the act, or habit, or virtue of the underſtanding, whereby we judge what is fit, or unfit, to the end things are deſigned for, has regard to both the thing itſelf, that is to be performed; and to the circumſtances, or manner of performance. As to the thing itſelf that is to be performed, the work of wiſdom is, to judge of the fitneſs of it to the end, for which it is deſigned. And if we are not careful to attend to this, we may do the thing that is good and reaſonable in itſelf, but is not ſo to us, becauſe we know not why, nor to what end we do it. And as to the circumſtances, or manner of performance, the work of wiſdom is, to judge what circumſtance, or manner of performance is moſt fit and proper, as moſt likely to promote the good and happy end, for which that thing, and our doing of it is deſigned. And if we fail in this, our doing of that thing, for ought we know, may be attended with ſome unhappy circumſtance, which may very much obſtruct that end; or we may omit ſome circumſtances, as to the manner of performance, which is either abſolutely neceſſary to it, or, at leaſt, would very much promote it.

So that, whether we reſpect the thing itſelf that is to be performed, as to its fitneſs to the end for which it is deſigned; or the manner of performance, as to the fitneſs of any circumſtance for the more effectual promotion of that end; the neceſſity of wiſdom, in both reſpects, is evident, for that, in general, we can do nothing that is good, and in order to our happineſs, as we ought to do, without it. But, particularly,

This will appear, by conſidering, that there are ſeveral particular duties of religion, very uſeful to our preſent and eternal welfare, which require great wiſdom and prudence, in order to a right and due performance of them to thoſe ends: As for example,

Firſt, Temperance: This is a duty highly neceſſary, not only from the command of God enjoining it, but from the naked reaſon of the thing; for Temperance is the middle, betwixt thoſe two extremes of intemperance, or exceſs, on one hand; and niggardlineſs, or denying our ſelves what is neceſſary and convenient for the preſervation of life and health, on the other hand. And to manage it aright, ſo as neither to exceed, nor to cut ſhort of what is needful to thoſe ends, as it is in a great meaſure left to us, ſo it requires no little wiſdom and diſcretion in us, to judge of, and determine that true mediocrity, which we ought neither to exceed, nor to fall ſhort of. For there are two conſiderable circumſtances, which ought to be carefully attended to in this caſe; one is, our fortune and condition in the world; and the other is, our conſtitution, not as to what it may be capable of bearing, but with reſpect to what it does require, for its ſupport and maintenance in a due ſtate of health and vigour. According to either or both of which circumſtances, it is our wiſdom, ſo to apportion our proviſions to them, as, though we may exceed or come ſhort of others, who are poorer or richer, or of a weaker or ſtronger conſtitution than our ſelves; yet not to exceed, or cut ſhort our ſelves, of our own abilities and neceſſities: Becauſe we can do neither, without the guilt of ſin; and becauſe, by doing either of them, we very much endanger our preſent and eternal welfare.

Secondly, Another virtue, or rather duty of religion, as to which, in order to a right performance of it, great wiſdom is required, is univerſal juſtice, or our doing to all other men, in all reſpects, as we would have others do to us. For if this duty muſt be univerſally performed, by all to all; there muſt be ſeveral circumſtances attending the performance of it, which if we do not carefully advert to, we may be guilty of frequent errors and miſtakes, or many overſights at leaſt; and ſo in multitudes of inſtances be very far from a right and due performance of it. So that, though the rule be very plain, as to moſt caſes that may happen; yet many inſtances may be, in which no little prudence and diſcretion are required, that we may neither over-do, nor under-do the matter; neither go beyond, nor yet fall ſhort of the merits of the caſe; neither do more, nor leſs than is required by that rule, of dealing ſo with every other man, as in and under the like circumſtances, we would have others deal with us.

Thirdly, Another duty is charity; which, though it be one ſpecies or kind of juſtice, and ſo may come under the forementioned rule, yet is not unproperly, but, I might ſay, fitly reckoned a diſtinct duty by it ſelf: Becauſe, as juſtice is the duty of all men by nature; ſo charity, by the definitions given of it, and the rule preſcribed concerning it, by our Saviour in the Goſpel, is, in its full extent, a duty peculiar to Chriſtians only. With reference to which, in order to a right and due performance of it, the circumſtances of perſons, times, and place, are ſo very different, that the utmoſt wiſdom, prudence, and diſcretion we are, or can be maſters of, are ſcarce ſufficient to enable us to ſuch a juſt and fit performance of it, as may ſuit and anſwer every caſe, and effectually promote the ends, for which it ought to be performed; to wit, the real benefit of other men, and our own eternal welfare.

The laſt duty I ſhall mention, which is indeed ſubſervient to all the reſt that have been named, and therefore no leſs neceſſary than either of them, is, A juſt diligence and induſtry in our lawful callings and employments. I ſay, A juſt diligence and induſtry: For, as we muſt not endeavour to make proviſion for our ſelves by any indirect, or unjuſt ways or means; ſo in thoſe ways that are lawful and juſt, we muſt be ſo diligent and induſtrious, as to endeavour to provide for our ſelves what is neceſſary, but not to ſet our minds ſo wholly upon theſe worldly things, as to afford no time or pains for other matters of far greater moment; nor wholly to debar our ſelves of all innocent and uſeful diverſions and recreations, which may ſometimes be as neceſſary, and as truly beneficial to us, as our daily food. But as we ought not, on one hand, to be idle and ſlothful, but diligent to do our own buſineſs in that employment to which we are called; ſo, on the other hand, we ought to take heed and beware of covetouſneſs; Luke xii. 15. and not to make our ſelves ſo much ſlaves to the world, as to allow our ſelves no time either for innocent diverſion, or the ſervice of God, as if we had no expectation of any thing beyond this life. For we ought always to remember, what our Saviour has told us, in the place but juſt now quoted, That a man's life, that is, the true happineſs of life, does not conſiſt in the abundance of theſe worldly enjoyments; but, as the Scriptures tell us almoſt every where, in the ſervice and enjoyment of his God, whom to know, ſo as to fear and love him, is the only way to life eternal, to that future ſtate of happineſs, and reſt, and joy unſpeakable, which will never have an end.

Now, to make choice of, and endeavour after future happineſs, before, and rather than that which is ſo called at preſent, is a great evidence of wiſdom in us; and no ſmall meaſure of true wiſdom is required, that we may ſo endeavour after the former, as not wholly to neglect, or be careleſs of the latter: For only he that is wiſe can think on thoſe things, and purſue them as he ought; that is, in ſuch a way and manner, as to ſecure his future welfare, at the ſame time that he makes a juſt proviſion for his preſent happineſs.

II. The next propoſal was, To ſhew the ſin and danger of craft, and of folly.

And firſt, for craft; though it is not always vicious, yet it is generally found to be ſo. Sometimes, indeed, it has been made to ſerve religion, to promote the converſion of wicked men, or as a means of eſtabliſhing in the truth ſuch as have wavered, or the like: And then, in ſuch inſtances as theſe, it is a virtue, and a thing not only commendable in it ſelf, but, without doubt, acceptable unto God, for though it be true, that we muſt not do evil, that good may come of it; yet this being not an evil in it ſelf, but only by accident, as it may be circumſtantiated, ſo, according to the circumſtances that may attend it, it may be good, and conſequently, may lawfully be uſed in ſubſervience to religion, or a religious deſign. As for inſtance, if to reclaim a ſinner from the errors of his ways, all other means prove ineffectual; then, I do not queſtion but we may apply ourſelves to the uſe of any kind of ſtratagem, that is not ſinful, to trepan him, as it were, into the ways of holineſs and virtue, in order to his happineſs.

But then, it cannot be denied, that craft, according to the common acceptation of the word, and general practice of the thing, is much more frequently vicious, than virtuous; in that it is generally ſelfiſh, and made uſe of to promote ſome worldly intereſt and deſign: And to difference it from true and ſaving wiſdom, it is ſtiled the wiſdom of the world, or, worldly wiſdom; and is that very thing, for which our Saviour pronounced the children of this world, in their generations, wiſer than the children of light, Luke xvi. 8. His meaning is, "that the ſteward, before ſpoken of, who deceived his maſter, or the officer to whom thoſe fading things, the riches of this world, were committed, was, and ſo generally, all worldly men are, more provident and cunning, and more dextrous to make proviſion for themſelves againſt the time to come, that they may not want in this life, than moſt profeſſors of religion are, to provide for their eternal welfare." Now,

This, as it plainly ſignifies an endeavour to deceive, and over-reach, or undermine another for our own advantage, the preſervation or increaſe of worldly goods, is undoubtedly a ſin, and conſequently, highly dangerous to thoſe that practiſe it; in that no man can be honeſt that is addicted to it, and without honeſty no man can be ſafe, as to his future ſtate, however he may fare at preſent. It is a ſaying, frequent in the mouths of thoſe that uſe it leaſt, That honeſty is the beſt policy; which ſhews it to be the general ſenſe of mankind, even thoſe not excepted who are moſt diſhoneſt, that craft, in this ſenſe, is neither virtuous nor ſafe; and by conſequence, is very far from that true wiſdom, which it is the intereſt of all men to purſue and practice. In ſhort, the wiſdom of this world, by which, at leaſt in one ſenſe, all kinds of vicious craft and policy are meant, is fooliſhneſs with God; and what is ſo, cannot but carry danger with it. It lays upon the men who practiſe it a heavy load of guilt, fills them with fearful apprehenſions of what will be the dreadful conſequences of it in the future ſtate, and does indeed render them obnoxious to that wrath and indignation, which will to all eternity be rendered to every ſoul of man that does evil.

Then, ſecondly, folly, ſignifies the want of true and ſaving wiſdom: Which is ſo much the more ſinful and dangerous, by how much it is more wilful, as owing to our own neglect of thoſe means which are afforded, and required to be uſed, in order to obtain it. If a man will be a fool, eſpecially in matters of religion, when he has means afforded him that are ſufficient, if well uſed, to make him wiſe unto ſalvation, his folly is his ſin; and ſuch a ſin, as if perſiſted in, will infallibly hinder his eternal welfare. Therefore,

As wiſdom is that act or habit of the underſtanding, whereby we judge what is fit, or unfit to the end things are deſigned for; ſo folly is an incapacity of making ſuch a judgment: Which, if it be natural, and as ſuch, incurable by any means, will not be imputed as a ſin to any man, becauſe it is what he cannot help; but when there is a remedy preſcribed, and he is capable of uſing it, but will not, then it will be ſo imputed, becauſe the fault is not in his nature, but in his will, and the rod of God's diſpleaſure, which is prepared for the backs of all ſuch wilful fools, will be his lot to all eternity.

In ſhort; wiſdom is a virtue as neceſſary to our being truly religious, and ſo in order to our happineſs, as either faith or knowledge; and therefore, it concerns us highly, as we tender the eternal welfare of our ſouls, to make uſe of any lawful means, whether preſcribed or any other way diſcovered, by which we may acquire it, or improve it when acquired. And this leads me

III. To conſider the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of the means preſcribed by the Apoſtle, to wit, prayer to God, for the obtaining and improvement of true wiſdom: If any of you lack wiſdom, let him aſk of God.

Now the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of prayer to this purpoſe, will appear, by the two following conſiderations.

Firſt, That as it is from God we have our life and being, ſo it is he alone that furniſhes our ſouls with all thoſe virtuous habits, that are neceſſary to our well-being.

Our knowledge, faith, and wiſdom, or whatever other virtues are uſeful to our happineſs, are all the gifts of God, and are received from him, and do flow from him to us, as from the fountain of all gifts and graces. On which account, we may ſuppoſe, it is, that all virtues are called graces; becauſe they are all the iſſues of his grace and favour to us, without which we could not have them, and by which alone we are entruſted with them, that we may uſe them to his glory, and as neceſſary means and helps to the promotion of our own eternal welfare. So that, tho' we are required to work out our own ſalvation, yet the virtues, or graces, whereby we are enabled ſo to do, are all derived from the unbounded mercy, love and goodneſs of a gracious God to us, who of our ſelves, without his grace, are very weak and ſinful creatures, unable and unſkilful to do any thing, but what is evil and diſpleaſing to him, and what muſt tend, by conſequence, to make us miſerable. And therefore, it very much concerns us, to addreſs ourſelves to him by prayer, as for all other virtues, ſo eſpecially for wiſdom to do good, that we may pleaſe him, and be happy. For, Secondly, It is to be conſidered, that though wiſdom, as well as other virtues, is the gift of God, and every gift of God is free, ſo as by no means to be merited by us; yet we cannot have it, at leaſt, we have no reaſon to expect it, without asking for it. For, prayer is appointed as the neceſſary condition, and the moſt effectual means of obtaining any good from God, not only by the Apoſtle here, but alſo by our Bleſſed Saviour, who beſt knew the mind of God: Ask, and it ſhall be given you; ſeek, and ye ſhall find; knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that ſeeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it ſhall be opened, Matt. vii. 7, 8. and Luke xi. 9, 10. As if he had ſaid, "If any of you lack wiſdom, or any other grace or virtue, to enable you to live well, in order to your happineſs; apply your ſelves to God in prayer, and that will be a means of obtaining it. For, no child or friend of God's ever fails to receive from him what he thus asks of him. For prayer, if joined with conſtancy and importunity, never miſſes to obtain that which is moſt for our benefit to receive; and therefore, if we ſo pray, we ſhall not fail to obtain whatever grace we ſtand in need of." And this puts us in mind of the motives to a due performance of this duty, viz. God's bountiful hand, that gives bountifully to all thoſe that ask aright; never upbraideth, or twits a man in the teeth with his bounty; nor ever refuſeth to grant the petitions of his faithful ſervants.

CHAP. II.

It is not agreeable to a Chriſtian profeſſion to regard the rich, and to deſpiſe the poor brethren: 13 rather we are to be loving and merciful: 14 And not to boaſt of faith where no deeds are, 17 which is but a dead faith, 19 the faith of devils, 21 not of Abraham, 25 and Rahab.

MY brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons.

2 For if there come unto your aſſembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in alſo a poor man, in vile raiment;

3 And ye have reſpect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and ſay unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and ſay to the poor, Stand thou there, or ſit here under my footſtool:

4 Are ye not then partial in your ſelves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?

5 Hearken my beloved brethren. Hath not God choſen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promiſed to them that love him?

6 But ye have deſpiſed the poor. Do not rich men oppreſs you, and draw you before the judgment-ſeats?

7 Do not they blaſpheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

8 If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the ſcripture, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf, ye do well.

9 But if ye have reſpect to perſons, ye commit ſin, and are convinced of the law as tranſgreſſors.

10 For whoſoever ſhall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

11 For he that ſaid, Do not commit adultery, ſaid alſo, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a tranſgreſſor of the law.

12 So ſpeak ye, and ſo do, as they that ſhall be judged by the law of liberty.

13 For he ſhall have judgment without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy; and mercy rejoyceth againſt judgment.

14 What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, and have not works? can faith ſave him?

15 If a brother or ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food;

16 And one of you ſay unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed, and filled; notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

17 Even ſo faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.

18 Yea, a man may ſay, Thou haſt faith, and I have works: ſhew me thy faith without thy works, and I will ſhew thee my faith by my works.

19 Thou believeſt that there is one God; thou doſt well; the devils alſo believe and tremble.

20 But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

21 Was not Abraham our father juſtified by works, when he had offered Iſaac his ſon upon the altar?

22 Seeſt thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

23 And the ſcripture was fulfilled, which ſaith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteouſneſs: and he was called the friend of God.

24 Ye ſee then how that by works a man is juſtified, and not by faith only.

25 Likewiſe alſo, was not Rahab the harlot juſtified by works, when ſhe had received the meſſengers, and had ſent them out another way?

26 For as the body without the ſpirit is dead, ſo faith without works is dead alſo.

Ver. 1.—— Have not the faith—with reſpect of perſons.] i. e. You are not to regard the Doctrine preached for the ſake of him that preacheth, but you are to form your judgment of the preacher from the ſoundneſs of his doctrine; ſee 1 Cor. i. 10, &c. Neither reject any perſon from communicating with you in Chriſt on account of his poverty, nor prefer a rich man, as if his riches made him a better Chriſtian; ſee what follows in the text to ver. 14.

Ver. 4. — Judges of evil thoughts.] Or, Ye from an evil judgment in your thoughts, as, ſuppoſing that God is alſo a reſpecter of perſons, when he is not.

Ver. 5. — Choſen.] By the Goſpel of grace through Chriſt; ſee 1 Cor. i. 26, 28. and Luke xii. 21.

—— The kingdom, which he hath promiſed, &c.] Exod. xxvi. 6. compared with Matt. v. 3.

Ver. 6. — Ye have deſpiſed the poor.] Or, ſecluded them from your meetings or aſſemblies; ſee the like complaint of Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 22.

—— Oppreſs you, &c.] See my Diſſertation on the ſtate of the Jews out of Judea, and the Introduction to the Acts of the Apoſtles.

Ver. 8. — The royal law, &c.] In Levit. xix. 18. and Matt. xxii. 39.

Ver. 10. — He is guilty of all.] According to that of Deut. xxvii. 26.

Ver. 11. For he.] Or, that law which ſaid in Exod. xx. 13, 14.

Ver. 13. — Mercy rejoyceth againſt judgment.] i. e. The mercy we ſhew to one another, will be a means of our rejoycing when we are called to judgment, when every man ſhall be judged according to his works.

Ver. 20. —— Faith without works is dead.] Or, Our faith in Chriſt will avail us nothing, if we do not prove ourſelves good Chriſtians by an holy life and converſation; ſee my notes on Rom. i. 17.

Ver. 21. — Abraham.] See Heb. xi.

Ver. 24. —— Not by faith only.] See Rom. i. 17.

CHAP. III.

1 We are not raſhly or arrogantly to reprove others: 5 but rather to bridle the tongue, a little member, but a powerful inſtrument of much good, and great harm. 13 They who be truly wiſe, be mild, and peaceable, without envying, and ſtriſe.

MY brethren, be not many maſters, knowing that we ſhall receive the greater condemnation.

2 For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, and able alſo to bridle the whole body.

3 Behold, we put bits in the horſes mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.

4 Behold alſo the ſhips, which though they be ſo great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very ſmall helm, whitherſoever the governor liſteth.

5 Even ſo the tongue is a little member, and boaſteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!

6 And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: ſo is the tongue amongſt our members, that it defileth the whole body, and ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature; and it is ſet on fire of hell.

7 For every kind of beaſts, and of birds, and of ſerpents, and things in the ſea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind:

8 But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil full of deadly poiſon.

9 Therewith bleſs we God, even the Father; and therewith curſe we men, which are made after the ſimilitude of God.

10 Out of the ſame mouth proceedeth bleſſing and curſing. My brethren, theſe things ought not ſo to be.

11 Doth a fountain ſend forth at the ſame place ſweet water and bitter?

12 Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries; either a vine, figs; ſo can no fountain both yield ſalt water and freſh.

13 Who is a wiſe man, and endued with knowledge amongſt you? let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works with meekneſs of wiſdom.

14 But if ye have bitter envying, and ſtriſe in your hearts, glory not, and lye not againſt the truth.

15 This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh.

16 For where envying and ſtriſe is, there is confuſion, and every evil work.

17 But the wiſdom that is from above is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be entreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocriſy.

18 And the fruit of righteouſneſs is ſown in peace of them that make peace.

Ver. 1. —— Be not many maſters.] It is upon this dehortation, that the Apoſtle continues the reaſonings of the whole chapter: And therefore obſerve,

The word Διδάσκαλοι, which in my text is tranſlated maſters, properly ſignifies teachers, and the Apoſtle means by it ſuch as aſſume to themſelves a power of cenſuring and finding fault with every thing that is not juſt according to their own notion and model of things.

As it is every one's duty to exhort, reprove, rebuke thoſe that are in any degree of ſubjection to him, when they tranſgreſs their known duty; ſo it is an unpardonable fault to be cenſuring and judging other mens actions who are no ways under our government, upon every ſuppoſed and imaginary neglect of it.

In the 23d chapter of St. Matthew, when our Saviour had condemned the Scribes and Phariſees affectation to be called Rabbi, Rabbi, Maſter, Maſter, he cautions his hearers not to arrogate to themſelves thoſe names, ver. 8. But be ye not called Maſters, for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt, and all ye are brethren. And likewiſe at the 10th verſe, Neither be ye called maſters, for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt. Theſe texts give light to the Apoſtle's meaning, when he commands us not to be many maſters, knowing, ſays he, that ye ſhall receive the greater condemnation; that is, Do ye not preſume to cenſure and judge one another here, becauſe ye are all reſerved to a greater judgment hereafter. When the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from Heaven with his mighty angels, then is the proper time for judgment. He is your only Maſter now, and will be your only judge.

James in this chapter ſhews both the difficulty and neceſſity of bridling the tongue, a member of great uſe and advantage to us when rightly ordered and governed, for therewith bleſs we God; but a very unruly evil, and full of deadly poiſon, when indiſcreetly managed; for therewith alſo curſe we men, who are made after the ſimilitude of God. That part of the miſgovernment of the tongue, which the Apoſtle chiefly deſigned to reform by this chapter, is raſh cenſure or judging other mens actions, which fall not under our cognizance, and belong not to our juriſdiction ; a ſetting our ſelves up as the maſters, teachers, and judges of all men, ſo that nothing ſhall happen within the compaſs of our knowledge, but we ſhall examine it as critically, and cenſure it as confidently, as if we were the proper and only judges of it; not conſidering that we our ſelves are men, and upon that account not only incapable judges of it through the ſhortneſs of our faculties, but alſo improper ones, becauſe we are liable to the ſame faults, and reſerved to the ſame judgment.

CHAP. IV.

1 We are to ſtrive againſt covetouſneſs, 4 intemperance, 5 pride, 11 detraction, and raſh judgment of others : 13 and not to be confident in the good ſucceſs of worldly buſineſs, but mindful ever of the uncertainty of this life, to commit our ſelves, and all our affairs to Gods providence.

FROM whence come wars and fightings among you ? come they not hence, even of your luſts, that war in your members ?

2 Ye luſt, and have not : ye kill, and deſire to have, and cannot obtain : ye fight and war, yet ye have not, becauſe ye ask not.

3 Ye ask, and receive not, becauſe ye ask amiſs, that ye may conſume it upon your luſts.

4 Ye adulterers, and adultereſſes, know ye not, that the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God ? whoſoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God.

5 Do ye think that the ſcripture ſaith in vain, The ſpirit that dwelleth in us luſteth to envy ?

6 But he giveth more grace : wherefore he ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble.

7 Submit your ſelves therefore to God ; reſiſt the devil, and he will flee from you :

8 Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you : cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purify your hearts, ye double-minded.

9 Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep : let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heavineſs.

10 Humble your ſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift you up.

11 Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that ſpeaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law : but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

12 There is one law-giver, who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy : who art thou that judgeſt another ?

13 Go to now, ye that ſay, To day or to morrow we will go into ſuch a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain :

14 Whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow : For what is your life ? It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away.

15 For that ye ought to ſay, If the Lord will, we ſhall live, and do this, or that.

16 But now ye rejoyce in your boaſtings : all ſuch rejoycing is evil.

17 Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doth it not, to him it is ſin.

CHAP. V.

1 Wicked rich men are to fear Gods vengeance. 7 We ought to be patient in afflictions, after the example of the Prophets, and Job : 12 to forbear ſwearing, 13 to pray in adverſity, to ſing in proſperity : 16 to acknowledge mutually our ſeveral faults, to pray one for another, 19 and to reduce a ſtraying brother to the truth.

GO to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miſeries that ſhall come upon you.

2 Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3 Your gold and ſilver is cankered ; and the ruſt of them ſhall be a witneſs againſt you, and ſhall eat your fleſh as it were fire : ye have heaped treaſure together for the laſt days.

4 Behold, the hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth : and the cries of them which have reaped, are entred into the ears of the Lord of ſabbaoth.

5 Ye have lived in pleaſure on the earth, and been wanton ; ye have nouriſhed your hearts, as in a day of ſlaughter.

6 Ye have condemned and killed the juſt ; and he doth not reſiſt you.

7 Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain.

8 Be ye alſo patient ; ſtabliſh your hearts : for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9 Grudge not one againſt another, brethren, leſt ye be condemned : behold, the judge ſtandeth before the door.

10 Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have ſpoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of ſuffering affliction, and of patience.

11 Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

12 But above all things, my brethren, ſwear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea, be yea, and your nay, nay; leſt ye fall into condemnation.

13 Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him ſing pſalms.

14 Is any ſick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oyl in the name of the Lord:

15 And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up; and if he have committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him.

16 Confeſs your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

17 Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the ſpace of three years and ſix months.

18 And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19 Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

20 Let him know, that he which converteth the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins.

CHAP. iv, v. VER. 14, 15. Is any ſick among you? Let him call for the elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oyl in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up, &c.] This is the firſt text in theſe two chapters, that require our particular attention, and explication, not for any difficulty there appears to be in the letter thereof, but becauſe this text is that on which the Church of Rome has founded their erroneous doctrine of extreme unction. Therefore, I ſhall conſider this text, and their doctrine, in the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation on Extreme Unction.

I will firſt ſtate the doctrine of the Church of Rome, which they teach from this text in the words of their Council of Trent. Seſſ. 14.

"Firſt of all concerning the inſtitution of this ſacrament the Holy Synod declares and teaches, that our moſt Gracious Redeemer who would have his ſervants at all times provided with ſaving remedies and defences againſt all the weapons of all their enemies, as he has by other ſacraments ſupplied Chriſtians with thoſe mighty aids, by which they may in the courſe of their life keep themſelves unhurt by all the greater miſchiefs that can happen to their ſouls; ſo by the ſacrament of extreme unction he has ſet a moſt ſure guard about them, to make good the end of their life. For though our adverſary does all our life long ſeek and catch at every occaſion, by any means to devour our ſouls; yet there is no time when he ſtrains more vehemently to exert the utmoſt of his craft to ruin us utterly, and if he can poſſibly, to bereave us of all truſt in the mercy of God, than when he perceives the end of our life to be at hand.

But this holy unction of the ſick was inſtituted by our Lord Chriſt, as a ſacrament of the New Teſtament truly and properly ſo called; inſinuated indeed by Mark, but recommended and publiſhed to the faithful by James the Apoſtle, and brother of our Lord. Says he, Is any one ſick? &c. In which words, as the Church has learned by Apoſtolical tradition delivered from hand to hand, he teaches the matter, the form, the proper miniſter, and effect of this ſaving ſacrament. For the Church has underſtood the matter thereof to be oil bleſſed by a biſhop. For this unction does moſt fitly repreſent the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, by which the ſoul of the ſick perſon is inviſibly anointed:" And that the form thereof is this; By this holy unction and by his moſt holy mercy, God forgive thee whatſoever ſin thou haſt committed by ſeeing, by hearing, by taſting, by ſmelling, and by touching. Amen. Which form is repeated ſeverally in anointing the ſeat of each ſenſe; and according to the Florentine fathers in anointing the feet alſo for the ſins of walking, and the reins for the ſenſuality that reigned there; ſee Decret. Eugenii IV. in Conc. Florent. Catech. ad Paroc. de Extr. U. §. 21.

"Moreover the thing ſignified, and the effect of this ſacrament is explained in theſe words, and the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up; and if he have committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him. For the thing here ſignified, is the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe anointing cleanſeth from tranſgreſſions, if any yet remain to be expiated, and from the reliques of ſin; and eaſeth and ſtrengthneth the ſoul of the ſick perſon, by exciting in him a great confidence in the Divine Mercy; whereby he is in that manner ſupported, that the trouble and pain which he ſuſtains by his ſickneſs becomes more tolerable, and he reſiſts more eaſily the temptations of the Devil now cloſely lying in wait for him, and ſometimes, when it is expedient for the welfare of the ſoul, obtains the recovery of his bodily health.

But then as to the perſons who are deſigned, whether to receive or to adminiſter this ſacrament, this alſo is delivered, and that not obſcurely in the foregoing words. For it is there ſhewn, that the proper miniſters of this ſacrament, are the presbyters of the Church, by which word here we are not to underſtand the more aged, or honourable amongſt the people, but either biſhops or prieſts, &c. It is declared alſo that this unction is to be miniſtred to the ſick, but to thoſe eſpecially, who are ſo dangerouſly ill, that they ſeem to be paſt recovery; whence it is alſo called the ſacrament of the dying, (ſacramentum exeuntium.) If the ſick perſons recover after having received this unction, they may again be relieved by it, when the like danger of death happens. Wherefore they are by no means to be hearkened to, who againſt the manifeſt and clear ſenſe of the Apoſtle James, teach either that this unction is a device of men, or a rite received from the fathers that has neither a Divine Command, nor a promiſe of grace; and who aſſert that it is of no longer uſe, as having been applied in the primitive Church to the gift of healing only; or who ſay that the rite and uſage of the holy Roman Church in the adminiſtration of this ſacrament, is repugnant to the ſenſe of James, and therefore to be altered; laſtly, who affirm that this extreme unction may without ſin be contemned by the faithful. For all theſe things are moſt evidently contrary to the perſpicuous words of ſo great an Apoſtle," &c.

So that in the Church of Rome, extreme unction is a ſacrament adminiſtred to dying perſons, the proper effect whereof is the cleanſing of them from the remains of ſin, by the grace of the Holy Ghoſt; and as appears by the form of words uſed in the adminiſtration, it is applied in order to the forgiveneſs of all ſins that have been committed by means of any of the ſenſes. That authority which they pretend for this ſacrament is indeed the higheſt, for they ſay it was inſtituted by Chriſt. The proof which they produce for this inſtitution, is that it was inſinuated by Mark, and publiſhed by James. That the Evangeliſt did inſinuate it, and the other Apoſtle publiſh it, we have the word and authority of the Council of Trent. But I will be bold to ſay, that if men are not content to rely upon the authority of the Council, but will examine its proofs, they may eaſily be convinced, that neither did James publiſh, nor Mark inſinuate any ſuch doctrine, or practice as it has eſtabliſhed. And therefore, the wiſeſt paſſage in the declaration of the Council concerning this matter, is, that they are by no means to be hearkened unto who teach otherwiſe than it teaches. For if we can but perſwade men to give us the hearing or the reading, we are very confident to make it plain, that not our objections againſt this pretended ſacrament, but their pleas for it, are moſt evidently contrary to the perſpicuous words both of the Evangeliſt who is ſaid to inſinuate it, and of the Apoſtle who is ſaid to publiſh it. For,

Suppoſing that the inſtitution of a ſacrament were implied in theſe words of the text, ver. 14, 15. and that the outward ſign thereof were anointiug with oil, yet this could not by any means be the ſacrament of extreme unction in the Church of Rome. For, according to James, the ſick perſon was to be anointed in order to the raiſing of him up, or his recovery from ſickneſs. But the ſick are anointed in that Church for purging away the remains of their ſins, when they ſeem to be paſt hopes of recovery. And though perhaps one or other may recover afterward, yet this is merely accidental, and beſides the intention of adminiſtring their ſacrament; which they therefore call the ſacrament of the dying. Nay, the ſick perſon in James was not to be anointed, only in order to his recovery, but his recovery was certainly to follow, for it is ſaid the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up. Which one obſervation is ſufficient to overthrow all the hope they have in this text. For, James does indeed adviſe anointing with oil, but it is in ſuch a caſe when moſt aſſuredly the ſick perſon ſhould not die: The Church of Rome alſo does require the ſame, but it is when nothing can be well expected but the death of the patient. Now, which way they can gather a ſacrament of extreme unction from an authority that requires an unction which is not extreme, how they can prove a ſacrament which they pretend to be proper for dying perſons, from thoſe words of Scripture that mention a rite never uſed upon dying perſons; a man muſt have a great deal of wit, or rather a good ſhare of the contrary, to be able to imagine.

Which one thing ſeems to have been ſo well conſidered by Bellarmin, and others after him, that they found it neceſſary to interpret theſe words: The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up, not ſo much of reſtoring health to the body, as of cleanſing, forgiving, and quieting the ſoul; ſee Bellar. de extr. unct. c. 3. Dico ſecundo, illa verba duo, &c. And ſo they have made James to uſe expreſſions in ſuch a ſenſe, as never man of underſtanding did either before or after him, till the cauſe of the Church of Rome made it neceſſary for theſe men to interpret words againſt all rules of ſpeaking. For, according to the perpetual uſe of words, What is it to ſave the ſick, but to ſave him from his ſickneſs? What is it to raiſe up a ſick man, but to reſtore him to his health? And who would interpret theſe expreſſions otherwiſe, but they whoſe cauſe is deſperate if they be not otherwiſe interpreted? But if it be asked what grounds they pretend for this liberty of interpretation; you muſt know that the word ſaving, indifferently refers to the healing of the body, or to the reſtoring of the ſoul; and the word raiſing, though properly uſed of ſomething that belongs to the body, yet by a metaphor frequently uſed in Scripture, ſignifies alſo to drive away ſadneſs and dulneſs from the mind. Which is true, indeed, but nothing to the purpoſe. For though theſe words ſaving and raiſing may have different ſignifications according to the different matters ſpoken of; yet it is but one thing which they ſignify, when they are reſtrained by ſome peculiar matter. For inſtance, to raiſe, is a word that may be uſed to expreſs either awakening one that ſleeps; or bringing one that is careleſs to attention; or comforting the ſorrowful; or recovering a ſick man; or giving life to one that is dead. But will any man in his wits, unleſs he be carried away by the ſervice of a cauſe, affirm that to raiſe him that ſleeps, does indifferently ſignify all the other things, and not only awakening him out of his ſleep? By the ſame reaſon to raiſe the ſick, can ſignify nothing but to raiſe him from his ſickneſs, and to reſtore him to health. And though

The plain truth of the caſe is this; it is ſo evident that James by theſe words means nothing elſe but the recovery of bodily health, that theſe men are forced to ſhifts that were never heard of before, to make ſomething elſe to be underſtood by them, becauſe, otherwiſe their ſacrament is loſt. That James does mean bodily health, is a truth that ſtares them ſo fully in the face, that they are not able to diſſemble it; not Bellarmin himſelf, though he will not allow the gift of healing to be meant; Bellar. de Extr. Unc. c. iii. And therefore to draw ſome faint reſemblance between the uſe of their Extreme Unction, and that uſe of Unction which is mentioned in James; they are forced to pretend one effect of their ſacrament to be the cure of the body, ſo far as it is expedient, as Pope Eugenius IV. ſays; ſee Eugen. De cret. in Conc. Flor. and when it is expedient for the welfare of the ſoul, as ſays the Council of Trent.

But does it at any time appear that their unction reſtores a ſick man to health? or that they ſo much as expect it? Is any ſuch effect expreſſed in the form of adminiſtration, or any thing more than the forgiveneſs of ſins that are committed by means of the ſenſes? Nay, Do not they call this the ſacrament of dying perſons; and to be given eſpecially to thoſe that ſeem to be departing out of this life? Does not Bellarmin (ibid. c. v.) himſelf argue for their extreme unction from the convenience of being provided with a ſacrament to ſtrengthen us in our departure out of this world? Nay, Does not the Council of Trent tell us, that by the ſacrament of Extremo Unction, God has ſet a moſt ſure guard about Chriſtians, to make good the end of their life? For what reaſon therefore, does the ſame Council tell us, that the ſick perſon having been anointed, does ſometimes, when it is expedient for the welfare of the ſoul, obtain the recovery of his bodily health? Why, I ſay, do they in the doctrine of this their ſacrament, mention an accident ſo impertinent to the nature and deſign of it, as the recovery of bodily health? I anſwer, becauſe they are driven to it by an extreme neceſſity of feigning ſome reſemblance between the uſe of their unction, and of that in James. For it is ſo plain that James promiſes bodily health upon what he preſcribes to be done, that the wit of man is not able to diſguiſe it. And therefore, it was abſolutely neceſſary to give ſome hint of the ſame thing in their doctrine about extreme unction; tho' he muſt either have no eyes, or wink hard, who ſees not that it is thruſt in moſt impertinently, and againſt the whole tenour of their doctrine and practice, which plainly ſhew that it is not adminiſtred by them for the prolonging of life, but for the aſſiſtance of the ſoul at the hour of death.

Which theſe men are ſo ſenſible of, that they dare not venture their cauſe upon this weak attempt of bending their ſacrament to the text, by pretending ſome regard in their unction to the recovery of bodily health; but find themſelves obliged alſo to bend the text as unreaſonably to their ſacrament, by pretending that James does not ſpeak of reſtoring health only, in thoſe words of ſaving the ſick, and raiſing him up, but of cleanſing and ſtrengthning the ſoul too, as Bellarmin and Eſtius, in Loc. would make us believe.

As for the forgiveneſs of ſins mentioned in the following words of James, it was promiſed upon a ſuppoſition that the ſick perſon had committed ſins: And if he had committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him. Which plainly ſeems to be the ſuppoſition of a caſe, that was not common to all that were healed upon receiving the unction mentioned by the Apoſtle. And that even this promiſe does not afford the leaſt ground for the unction of the Roman Church, will appear when I come to explain the ſeveral expreſſions in the text.

In the mean time to ſhew that the power of truth does ſometimes prevail upon men of the beſt note in the Church of Rome, I ſhall cloſe this point with the confeſſion of no meaner a man than Cardinal Cajetan, who determines thus upon this place of James. "It neither appears by the words, nor by the effect, that he ſpeaks of the ſacrament of extreme unction, but rather of that unction which our Lord appointed in the Goſpel, to be uſed upon ſick perſons by his diſciples. For the text does not ſay, Is any man ſick unto death? but abſolutely, Is any man ſick? And it makes the effect to be the recovery of the ſick, and ſpeaks but conditionally of the forgiveneſs of ſins: Whereas extreme unction is not given but when a man is almoſt at the point of death, and as the form of words then uſed ſufficiently ſhews, it tends directly to the forgiveneſs of ſins.

Though what hath been ſaid is enough to deprive the Roman unction of all relief and ſupport from this place of Scripture; yet for the benefit of thoſe, who poſſibly have not well conſidered the text before us, I ſhall offer the plain meaning of it, and ſhew for what end and purpoſe anointing with oil was preſcribed by James.

There were ſeveral extraordinary gifts diſperſed by the ſpirit amongſt the firſt believers, for the eſtabliſhing of Chriſtianity in the world; and that one kind of theſe were the gifts of healing; ſee 1 Cor. xii. 9, 28—30.

That they who had this power, were directed by the impulſe of the ſpirit, when or upon what perſons to exert it. That being thus directed, they called upon the name of the Lord with aſſurance of the event, and the ſick were accordingly reſtored to their health.

That ſometimes they did in this manner heal the ſick, upon whom diſeaſes had been inflicted, as a puniſhment for ſome ſins they had been guilty of.

That in this direction of James, Is any man ſick, &c. he refers to theſe extraordinary gifts of healing; and that he preſcribes anointing the ſick perſon with oil, in that caſe only, when the elders knew by the ſpirit, that the gift of healing was to be ſhewn, and that the Lord would raiſe him up.

So that in caſe of ſickneſs James directs the ſick perſon to ſend for the elders of the Church, and adds a particular motive ſo to do from the gift of healing, which then flouriſhed in the Church, viz. that if it ſeemed good to God, which the elders would aſſuredly know by the inſtruction of the ſpirit, he ſhould by their praying over him him be reſtored to his health. In which caſe to ſignify the ſupernatural gift of God in raiſing him up, they were according to cuſtom to anoint him with oil. Whereupon the event would ſhew that their prayer was not the prayer of vain confidence, but of faith, and that they had not in vain accounted the ſick with oil in teſtimony of their aſſurance of his recovery; for as he ſays, the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up. And to adviſe the ſick man more effectually to take this religious courſe, he adds another motive, that if that ſickneſs were ſent to puniſh him for ſome ſins that he had committed, even that ſhould not hinder his recovery, any more than if it had been inflicted only for the trial of his faith and patience; for his ſins ſhould be forgiven him.

In which interpretation the main point of controverſy that remains between us, is that, as we ſay, the unction mentioned by James, was a rite or ceremony of miraculous healing For if this proves true, all their pretence from this place to eſtabliſh a ſacrament of extreme unction for the ſanctifying of the ſoul, and the forgiveneſs of their ſins, who are ready to depart out of this life, it is all I ſay irrecoverably overthrown. And therefore, let us now enquire into the meaning of James his unction, and ſee whether there be not ſufficient reaſon to conclude of it as we do, and no appearance of reaſon for what they conclude from it.

There are but three ways that I know of which the New Teſtament affords to find out the uſe and meaning of this ceremony at the beginning of the Goſpel. One is to compare this place with Mark vi. 13. Another to conſider the words of the place it ſelf. And a third to ſee what light is given to it, by the following paſſages in James that have a manifeſt connexion with the text that is under debate. And,

As for that paſſage of Mark, there it is ſaid of the twelve who were ſent forth by our Saviour to preach, and to confirm their doctrine by ſigns and wonders; that they went out and preached that men ſhould repent; and they caſt out many devils; and anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them. In which words it is evident that the anointing with oil, which the Apoſtles uſed, was the ceremony of a miraculous cure of the ſick: For they give an account of what the Apoſtles did in the purſuance of that commiſſion, and in the uſe of that power which they had received from Chriſt. But that they received power from him to cure diſeaſes, is expreſly affirmed by Luke, ch. ix. 1, 2. Then he called his twelve diſciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diſeaſes; and he ſent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the ſick. And therefore, what can be more plain, than that the healing mentioned by Mark, was by the uſe of that power which they had received from their maſter, i. e. that it was miraculous? And conſequently that the anointing with oil, which is joined with it, was nothing elſe but a ſymbol or ſign of the miraculous cure.

Beſides this ceremony had been of ancient uſe, and was known to have a ſignification not much unlike that of impoſition of hands; ſee Grotius in Loc. It was commonly uſed to denote the conferring either of authority and office, or gifts and graces enabling for the adminiſtration thereof. Whence it might by an eaſy turn be applied, (as impoſition of hands undoubtedly was) to ſignify ſo extraordinary a gift and favour of God to a ſick man, as that of raiſing him up by a miraculous power.

But whatever the reaſon might be of the choice of this ceremony when the Apoſtles healed many ſick perſons: This however is very plain, that they healed them by a miraculous power which their maſter had given them. And by comparing what Mark ſays upon this occaſion, with Matthew and Luke, it ſeems to me that anointing with oil was not only a rite uſed by them to ſignify the miraculous cure, but that this meaning of it was generally underſtood. My reaſon is this, becauſe Matthew and Luke, who make no mention of the ceremony, do expreſly affirm the power of healing to be a gift which they had now received from Jeſus: And Mark who mentions not the gift, does only expreſs the ceremony which they uſed in healing. Therefore, becauſe in ſubſtance they all deliver the ſame thing, it ſhould ſeem that Mark ſufficiently expreſſed the miraculous gift by which the Apoſtles healed the ſick, by ſaying that they anointed many with oil that were ſick, and healed them; and by conſequence, that the uſe of this ceremony upon ſuch an occaſion was ſufficiently underſtood to be an indication of a miraculous cure.

What Luke reports, we have ſeen already; and Matthew is no leſs expreſs, viz. that he gave his twelve diſciples power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out; and to heal all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe, and that he ſaid to them, Heal the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, raiſe the dead, caſt out devils: Freely ye have received, freely give, Matt. x. 1—8. i. e. The power by which ye are to do theſe things is ſupernatural and coſt you nothing, and you ſhall take nothing for the uſe of it. But now Mark mentions no other power in the commiſſion which Jeſus gave them, but that over unclean ſpirits, Mark vi. 7. And yet deſcribing what they did in purſuance of their commiſſion, he ſays, They caſt out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them, Mark vi. 13. which words being compared with what the other Evangeliſts ſay, are to be interpreted in this manner. And as for the ſick which they healed, that was done no leſs by a Divine and Supernatural Power, than the caſting out of devils; for they uſed nothing but the known ceremony betokening an extraordinary work of God in the cures they wrought, that is, anointing with oil. And thus thoſe words of Mark do plainly enough ſuppoſe that power of healing the ſick to have been in their commiſſion, though he did not at firſt expreſs it as the other two Evangeliſts did.

Finally, It doth not appear that our Saviour enjoined the uſe of this ceremony, but it is rather probable that he did not, ſince the Apoſtles healed many perſons without it. And therefore,

Being the only place in the New Teſtament, where anointing with oil is mentioned, beſides that of James, and it being alſo plain that the unction in Mark referred to the gift of healing, ſurely the unction ſpoken of here by James muſt have the ſame ſignification; or elſe it is a place of ſuch obſcurity, that it will be very hard to find a ſacrament in it, or to make any concluſion whatſoever from it: For, in all appearance, the very ſame caſe is ſpoken of in both places. The action is the ſame, viz. anointing with oil; the perſons anointed are in the ſame circumſtances, for in both they are the ſick: And the event the ſame, for in Mark they were healed, and here in James it is expreſly ſaid, The Lord ſhall raiſe him up. What therefore ſhould hinder, but that if anointing were the ceremony of miraculous healing in the one, it ſhould have the ſame ſignification in the other? If there were any difficulty in theſe words of James, and it were doubtful to what purpoſe the unction by him mentioned was applied, one would think the obſcurity ſhould wholly diſappear before the light that Mark offers to clear that text. But that in all appearance the ſame caſe ſhould be expreſſed in both, and yet there ſhould be ſo vaſt a difference as the Roman doctrine ſuppoſes, is for them to believe, who make the Scriptures good for nothing, till the Church comes to find out a meaning for them.

I proceed to explain the other two paſſages, that ſeem to require any farther illuſtration.

The one is the prayer of faith; the other, If he has committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him. Now,

1. By the prayer of faith, we muſt neceſſarily underſtand prayer accompanied with a perſuaſion wrought by the impulſe of the Spirit, that God would raiſe up the ſick: not with that faith only which is a perſwaſion of the general promiſes of God made to the whole Church; ſince there is no ſuch abſolute promiſe in the Goſpel, that God will grant health to the ſick upon our prayer. But James affirms, that the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up. Which makes it plain that the faith here mentioned was the perſwaſion of the elders that it was God's pleaſure that at that time the gift of healing ſhould take place: For, as I ſaid before, prayer grounded upon the belief of the promiſes of the new covenant, or upon that faith only which is common to all Chriſtians, cannot warrant the obtaining of health, or of any other temporal bleſſing in particular.

Nor is this the only place where faith is taken for a perſwaſion that God will do a miracle. For, thus we are to underſtand it in that ſaying of Paul, Though I have all faith ſo that I could remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. In which he ſeemed to refer to that ſaying of our Saviour to his diſciples, If ye have faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove; and nothing ſhall be impoſſible unto you, Mattt. xvii. 20. And it is very evident, that our Saviour ſpake of the prayer of ſuch faith as this in that promiſe to his diſciples, Whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye ſhall aſk any thing in my name, I will do it, John xiv. 12, 13. i. e. upon their prayer God would glorify himſelf, and the Goſpel of his Son by the teſtimony of miracles: For theſe words are a continuation of the promiſe made in the foregoing verſe; He that believeth on me, the works that I do ſhall he do alſo, and greater works than theſe he ſhall, becauſe I go unto my Father. But this is a notion ſo generally underſtood, that I need not inſiſt upon it.

Now, if the prayer of faith was made for the recovery of the ſick man, it ſtands to reaſon that his being anointed with oil ſhould refer to the ſame matter. For, the Apoſtle lays down this motive to the uſe of prayer and unction, that the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick; and thus theſe paſſages go eaſily and conſonantly together: Whereas if the extreme unction of the Church of Rome be ſuppoſed in this place, the whole muſt run after this manner; Is any man ſick, let him ſend for the elders of the Church; and let them adminiſter to him the ſacrament and office of extreme unction, to prepare his ſoul for its departure out of this life; for, if they know by the Spirit that the gift of healing is now to be exerciſed, and do thereupon pray for his recovery, he ſhall not depart out of this life, but the Lord will raiſe him up. And who does not ſee that at this rate the paſſages of the text are not only incoherent, but inconſiſtent with one another?

2. That other clauſe, If he has committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him, is a promiſe made upon ſuppoſition of a caſe, which did not always happen in the uſe of anointing the ſick. Now I am yet to underſtand, why the Apoſtle ſhould make a ſuppoſition of ſuch a ſpecial caſe as that of the anointed perſon's having committed ſins, if unction was preſcribed as a ſacrament for the remiſſion of ſins? For the ſuppoſition taken with the reſt of the period, plainly enough implies, a direction to anoint the ſick perſon for whom the prayer of faith was made, whether he had committed ſins or not; only if he had committed ſins, they ſhould be forgiven him. Whatever James means here by having committed ſins, it is yet evident that this was not the caſe of all that were anointed; and therefore whatever is meant alſo by the forgiveneſs of ſins in this place, neither was this promiſed to all that were anointed; which ſeems to be a ſhrewd argument, that he did not preſcribe unction as a ſacrament for the remiſſion of ſins: Eſpecially if it be conſidered that the caſe of all that were anointed, was this, that they were ſick, and that the promiſe abſolutely made to all that were anointed, was the recovery of their health; for this ſhews as clearly on the other ſide, that James's unction was the ceremony of a miraculous cure of the body. Surely if we are to gather the meaning of this rite from the words of the text, where it was preſcribed, we are rather to refer it to that effect which the Apoſtle tells us would certainly and always follow, viz. the recovery of health; than to that which would never follow, but in a ſpecial caſe, viz. the forgiveneſs of ſins. And it is certain that James makes the conſtant effect of his unction to be the recovery of his bodily health; and he aſſures us that ſometimes the forgiveneſs of ſins would follow. For, by committing ſins, the Apoſtle did not mean ſimply and abſolutely having ſinned; but with reference to that matter only, whereof he was then ſpeaking, viz. that bodily ſickneſs, which was to be removed by the gift of healing. So that the meaning muſt neceſſarily be this, And if he has committed ſuch ſins as it pleaſed God to puniſh by viſiting him with ſickneſs, they ſhall be forgiven him. Beſides thoſe places, where committing and not committing ſin, are to be underſtood with ſome qualification, ſuch as that, He that committeth ſin is of the Devil. And whoſoever is born of God doth not commit ſin, and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God; 1 John iii. 8, 9. There is one ſaying of our Saviour, that requires the ſame interpretation with this paſſage in James. When his diſciples asked him, Maſter, who did ſin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? Jeſus anſwered, Neither hath this man ſinned, nor his parents; John ix. 2, 3. i. e. It was for no ſin, either of him or his parents, that he was born blind, but that the works of God ſhould be made manifeſt in him. In like manner the ſuppoſition of the ſick man's having committed ſins, is to be limited by reference to the caſe now diſcourſed of, that is, of his ſickneſs. For whether it came in the ordinary and natural courſe of things, or whether God ſent for the trial of his patience and ſubmiſſion, the prayer of faith ſhould ſave the ſick; or if it were inflicted as a puniſhment, and for his correction, God would releaſe him of the puniſhment, and raiſe him up, and his ſins ſhould be forgiven.

It is not perhaps unfit to remember in this place, that in the beginning of the Church, it pleaſed God to inflict bodily diſeaſes upon many Chriſtians that had grievouſly offended in any kind, and this not only in purſuance of Church cenſures, but ſometimes without them; which was the caſe of thoſe in the Church of Corinth, who for their unworthy behaviour at their aſſemblies for celebrating the Holy Communion, were viſited with God's Hand. For ſaith Paul, For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep; 1 Cor. xi. 30. i. e. Many are dead of thoſe ſickneſſes which God ſent to chaſtiſe you for that great fault that reigned amongſt you, and many of you remain under thoſe ſickneſſes ſtill, being not yet humbled under the mighty Hand of God. If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged, ver. 31. i. e. By care to do our duty, we ſhould prevent God's chaſtiſements; but if upon neglecting our ſelves we are chaſtned by the Lord, it is, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world, ver. 32. For God did not ſtrike them with ſudden death, but with ſome ſudden ſickneſs, and gave them time to repent, to confeſs their fault, and to ſatisfy the Church; ſee Bede in Loc. Tom. 5.

Thus I have, I hope, with ſufficient argument detected the impoſition of the Romiſh doctrine of extreme unction, and by a clear, unwreſted interpretation of theſe two verſes in James ch. v. 14, 15. ſhewn that ſuch a doctrine has no foundation in Scripture, and that they, who diſuſe ſuch a practice and inſtitution, do only their duty in forſaking the doctrines and commandments of men, invented to delude the credulous, and to pervert them from the ways of the Lord. Yet,

I ſhall endeavour to ſtrengthen what has been written by a further explication of the following context.

Ver, 16. Confeſs your faults one to another, and pray one for another.] Where note, That there is no clear reaſon to warrant my determination, whether by praying one for another in this verſe, is meant the prayer of faith in the former verſe, which was referred to the gift of healing, and was accompanied with a perſuaſion, that God would raiſe up the ſick; or only a praying, that God would pleaſe to raiſe ſuch a one up, when they had no abſolute perſuaſion that their petitions would be fully anſwered by his recovery; yet I will venture to ſay, that in what ſenſe ſoever the words be taken, as they muſt be in one of them, they ſeem to have a very reaſonable connexion with what went before; and either way this exhortation is to be referred to that ſpecial caſe mentioned juſt before; And if he has committed ſins they ſhall be forgiven him. Therefore,

If the prayer of faith is here meant (as I think it is) then James exhorts the ſick perſon, whom God had viſited for his ſins, to humble himſelf, and give glory to God, by confeſſing to the elders thoſe ſins which lay upon his conſcience; and likewiſe intimates, that the gift of healing would not otherwiſe take place in his caſe; and therefore he was firſt to confeſs, and then the elders to pray over him; whoſe prayers would certainly prevail for his recovery no leſs than in any other caſe, if it was the prayer of faith mentioned before in ver. 15.

But if the prayer here ſpoken of were not the prayer proceeding from a perſuaſion that the ſick would be healed, but the ordinary prayer of the faithful one for another, imploring the recovery of the ſick perſon, if it ſhould ſeem good to God; then this exhortation may well be conceived to run thus; "But whether the elders be inſtructed by the ſpirit, that the gift of healing is, in the caſe laſt mentioned, to take place, or no; yet let the ſick perſon confeſs his faults, and then let the elders pray for him, that he may be healed, which God may be pleaſed to grant, though not in the way of demonſtrating that extraordinary gift of healing, which is ſo frequently ſeen in the Church.

But let the meaning be this or that, we have this advantage from the place, that the effect of confeſſion and prayer here expreſſed, is no other than that the perſon might be healed, i. e. recover his bodily health; which is a farther confirmation, that James had not before directed to the uſe of a ſacrament for the ſoul; but to the uſe of that gift then flouriſhing in the Church, which was for the ſaving of the body; though that alſo was deſigned for the good of ſouls, as indeed all other miraculous operations were, and all the gifts of God whatſoever.

— The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.] i. e. It availeth ſometimes to the producing of ſtrange and ſudden effects, (as the example of Elias ſhews, which is immediately added in the context) which is a good argument to back the foregoing exhortation of confeſſing to one another, and praying one for another, ſuppoſing that thoſe prayers of good men are to be underſtood, which are grounded upon the general promiſes of God only. But to me it ſeems more probable, that the prayer of faith is ſtill meant, becauſe of the inſtance of Elias his prayer, by which the Apoſtle does preſently illuſtrate his meaning. And to this notion the Greek word 'Ενεργȣμένη δέησις, which we tranſlate effectual fervent, is very favourable; becauſe it aptly ſignifies that incitation and impulſe of the Holy Spirit, which operates the prayer of faith. But although this ſenſe appears reaſonable, I will not ſtand upon it, if equal reaſon can be given for another. It will be ſufficient to my purpoſe to obſerve, that although the prevalency of a good man's prayer is here affirmed in general terms; and though without all queſtion ſuch a man's earneſt prayer is very forcible for the obtaining of ſpiritual benefits, which is the beſt force they have; yet the caſe of which he ſpake juſt before [that ye may be healed] limits his meaning of that power of prayer, which he ſpeaks of here, to that of producing temporal effects. Which limitation is required no leſs by that which follows.

Ver. 17. Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth by the ſpace of three years and three months. Ver. 18. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.] Now that both in the one caſe and in the other, the prayer of Elias was the prayer of faith, in the ſenſe ſo often already mentioned, cannot juſtly be queſtioned; for as we know from James, that he prayed that it might not rain, and again that it might rain; ſo we know by the hiſtory of the Old Teſtament; 1 Kings xviii. 1. xvii. 41, &c. that he expreſly and abſolutely foretold to Ahab, both the one and the other. And it is evident, that this is an inſtance of the power of prayer to produce temporal effects of a ſurpriſing and wonderful nature; which makes the inſtance pertinent to what he had been ſpeaking of before. Nor is it impertinent to obſerve, that as the with-holding of rain for ſo long time upon Elias his prayer, does in part anſwer the caſe of a ſinner's being ſmitten with ſickneſs for his tranſgreſſion, ſo the ſending of rain upon the prayer of Elias, does fully anſwer the caſe of the ſick man's recovery, by means of the prayer of faith. And,

Now James having finiſhed his diſcourſe concerning the healing of the ſick, does immediately cloſe all with this inſtruction.

Ver. 19, 20. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, Let him know, that he who converteth the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins.] As if he had ſaid, "After all, when any Chriſtian does by wicked practice depart from the truth which he profeſſes, and one of his brethren, by charitable admonitions, and by earneſt prayers to God for him, brings him into the way of his duty again; let him know, that this is an infinitely better work, than to recover the ſick, though by the gift of healing, which of itſelf extendeth no farther than to a temporal benefit. For he that brings a ſinner to repentance, is a means to ſave that man's ſoul, and ſhall himſelf find mercy from God for this charity to his brother, more than if he had wrought never ſo many miraculous cures upon the bodies of the ſick.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,
ON THE Firſt EPISTLE GENERAL
OF PETER.

The INTRODUCTION.

This Epiſtle with that that follows being written to the Chriſtians diſperſed through the countries of the Leſſer Aſia, ch. i. 1, 2. by the Apoſtle Peter is called General, like that of the Apoſtle James laſt treated of.

Peter the Apoſtle was the author according to the beſt and ancienteſt accounts; and the Chriſtians, it is thought, were moſtly converted Jews; though that expreſſion in ch. ii. 10. which declares that in times paſt they were not a people, ſhews that there were ſome Gentile Proſelytes among them. Therefore,

The Apoſtle's endeavours is in the firſt place to prevent their apoſtacy from the Chriſtian Religion; and by an argument raiſed from that incorruptible inheritance reſerved for the faithful in Heaven, he exhorts them to deſpiſe the perſecutions and fiery trials they underwent in this life for Chriſt's ſake: For, ſays he, theſe perſecutions are trials of your faith, and therefore ought to be a matter of rejoicing to them, who can thereby ſecure to themſelves praiſe, honour and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. To which

He adds, that the Chriſtian Doctrine is no new thing, the Prophets having foretold this ſalvation by Chriſt, his ſufferings and glory: And that they loſe no privileges by believing in Chriſt, but rather obtain greater; which he expreſſes in the Jewiſh phraſes, ch. ii. 9. like that of Exodus xix. 6. of being a royal prieſthood. an holy nation, a peculiar people, which, ſays he, are now the privileges of Chriſtians, however the unbelieving Jews claimed them for themſelves.

Then the Apoſtle directs them in an holy converſation; not only carefully to avoid all ſin and luſts which might be a ſcandal among the Heathen; but to diſcharge the ſeveral duties which Chriſtianity requires; and eſpecially that relative duty from ſubjects to governors, &c. which I preſume he preſſed the more earneſtly at that time, ch. ii. 13. to preſerve the converts from being concerned in the rebellion againſt the Roman Emperor and his officers, which was then breaking out among the Jews. And,

He urges this his exhortation and direction with this particular motive, The end of all things is at hand, ch. iv. 7. i. e. The Jewiſh ſtate was then near to an end, for their deſtruction was approaching, according to our Saviour's own phraſe concerning the ſame deſtruction of the Jews, Matt. xxvi. 6. where he ſays that the end of the Jewiſh nation was not yet, or in his time; but it was near at hand when Peter wrote this Epiſtle.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

1 He bleſſeth God for his manifeſt ſpiritual graces : 10 Shewing that the ſalvation in Chriſt is no news, but a thing propheſied of old : 13 And exhorteth them accordingly to a godly converſation, foraſmuch as they are now born anew by the word of God.

PETER an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to the ſtrangers ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia,

2 Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied.

3 Bleſſed be the God, and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead,

4 To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for you,

5 Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, ready to be revealed in the laſt time.

6 Wherein ye greatly rejoyce, though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations.

7 That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praiſe and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt :

8 Whom having not ſeen, ye love ; in whom though now ye ſee him not, yet believing, ye rejoyce with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory :

9 Receiving the end of your faith, even the ſalvation of your ſouls.

10 Of which ſalvation the prophets have enquired, and ſearched diligently, who propheſied of the grace that ſhould come unto you :

11 Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Chriſt which was in them did ſignify, when it teſtified before-hand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow.

12 Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themſelves, but unto us they did miniſter the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the goſpel unto you, with the holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven ; which things the angels deſire to look into.

13 Wherefore gird up the loyns of your mind, be ſober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt ;

14 As obedient children, not faſhioning your ſelves according to the former luſts, in your ignorance :

15 But as he which hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation ;

16 Becauſe it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

17 And if ye call on the Father, who without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every mans work, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear :

18 Foraſmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, from your vain converſation received by tradition from your fathers ;

19 But with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a Lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot :

20 Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifeſt in theſe laſt times for you ;

21 Who by him do believe in God that raiſed him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God.

22 Seeing ye have purified your ſouls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren ; ſee that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently :

23 Being born again, not of corruptible ſeed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever.

24 For all fleſh is as graſs, and all the glory of man as the flower of graſs. The graſs withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away :

25 But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the goſpel is preached unto you.

Ver. 1. Peter an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt.] This is the title which Peter takes to himſelf, and ſo did Paul; ſee Rom. i. 1. 1 Cor. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1, &c. Therefore there was no primacy among the Apoſtles; for if there had, Peter would, and muſt now have taken that ſuperior title, which the Papiſts now give him, had he any right to it.

Ver. 6.——Temptations.] Promiſes of life, &c. in the midſt of perſecutions, which often tempt weak ſouls to depart from the faith.

Ver. 10.——The Prophets have enquired.] See the Introduction.

Ver. 16.———It is written.] In Levit. xi. 44. xix. 2. and xx. 7.

Ver. 20.———Fore-ordained, &c.] See Rom. iii. 25. xvi. 25, 26. Col. i. 26. 1 Tim. i. 10. Tit. i. 2. Rev. xiii. 8.

Ver. 22.———Through the ſpirit.] i. e. By the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 25.———By the Goſpel.] Or, through the miniſtry of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

CHAP. II.

1 He dehorteth them from the breach of charity: 4 ſhewing that Chriſt is the foundation whereupon they are built. 11 He beſeecheth them alſo to abſtain from fleſhly luſts: 13 To be obedient to magiſtrates, 18 And teacheth ſervants how to obey their maſters, 20 patiently ſuffering for well-doing after the example of Chriſt.

WHerefore laying aſide all malice, and all guile, and hypocriſies, and envies, and all evil-ſpeakings,

2 As new-born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

3 If ſo be ye have taſted that the Lord is gracious.

4 To whom coming as unto a living ſtone, diſallowed indeed of men, but choſen of God, and precious,

5 Ye alſo as lively ſtones, are built up a ſpiritual houſe, an holy prieſthood, to offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices, acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt.

6 Wherefore alſo it is contained in the ſcripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner ſtone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him ſhall not be confounded.

7 Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious: but unto them which be diſobedient, the ſtone which the builders diſallowed, the ſame is made the head of the corner,

8 And a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which ſtumble at the word, being diſobedient, whereunto alſo they were appointed.

9 But ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him, who hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light:

10 Which in time paſt were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

11 Dearly beloved, I beſeech you as ſtrangers and pilgrims, abſtain from fleſhly luſts, which war againſt the ſoul,

12 Having your converſation honeſt among the Gentiles: that whereas they ſpeak againſt you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they ſhall behold, glorify God in the day of viſitation.

13 Submit your ſelves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake: whether it be to the king as ſupreme;

14 Or unto governors, as unto them that are ſent by him for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well.

15 For ſo is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men:

16 As free, and not uſing your liberty for a cloke of maliciouſneſs, but as the ſervants of God.

17 Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the king.

18 Servants, be ſubject to your maſters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but alſo to the froward.

19 For this is thank-worthy, if a man for conſcience toward God endure grief, ſuffering wrongfully.

20 For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye ſhall take it patiently? but if when ye do well, and ſuffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

21 For even hereunto were ye called: becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye ſhould follow his ſteps:

22 Who did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

23 Who when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he ſuffered, he threatned not; but committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly:

24 Who his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, ſhould live unto righteouſneſs: by whoſe ſtripes ye were healed.

25 For ye were as ſheep going aſtray, but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Biſhop of your ſouls.

Ver. 4.———Stone, diſallowed, &c.] The context to ver. 8. is an alluſion to Pſalm cxviii. 22.

Ver. 6.———In the Scripture.] Iſa. xxviii. 16. Rom. ix. 33.

Ver. 8. A ſtone of ſtumbling.] As Iſaiah hath ſaid, ch. viii. 14.

Ver. 9.———A choſen generation, &c.] See the Introduction.

Ver. 10.———In times paſt, &c.] i. e. Before your converſion from Gentiliſm; ſee the Introduction.

Ver. 24.——On the tree.] Of the croſs.

——By whoſe ſtripes, &c.] As Iſaiah foretold, ch. liii. 5.

Ver. 25.——Unto the ſhepherd, &c.] See Ezek. xxxiv. 23. xxxvii. 24.

Chap. III.

1 He teacheth the duty of wives and husbands to each other, 8 exhorting all men to unity and love, 14 and to ſuffer perſecution. 19 He declareth alſo the benefits of Chriſt toward the old world.

LIKEWISE ye wives, be in ſubjection to your own husbands; that if any obey not the word, they alſo may without the word be won by the converſation of the wives,

2 While they behold your chaſte converſation coupled with fear.

3 Whoſe adorning, let it not be that outward adorning, of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel:

4 But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price.

5 For after this manner in the old time, the holy women alſo who truſted in God adorned themſelves, being in ſubjection unto their own husbands,

6 Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whoſe daughters ye are as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.

7 Likewiſe ye husbands dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife as unto the weaker veſſel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindred.

8 Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compaſſion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous:

9 Not rendring evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwiſe, bleſſing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye ſhould inherit a bleſſing.

10 For he that will love life, and ſee good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they ſpeak no guile.

11 Let him eſchew evil, and do good; let him ſeek peace and enſue it.

12 For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil.

13 And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?

14 But and if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;

15 But ſanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, with meekneſs and fear:

16 Having a good conſcience; that whereas they ſpeak evil of you, as of evil-doers, they may be aſhamed that falſly accuſe your good converſation in Chriſt.

17 For it is better, if the will of God be ſo, that ye ſuffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.

18 For Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt (that he might bring us to God) being put to death in the fleſh, but quickened by the Spirit:

19 By which alſo he went and preached unto the ſpirits in priſon;

20 Which ſometime were diſobedient, when once the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight ſouls, were ſaved by water.

21 The like figure whereunto, even baptiſm, doth alſo now ſave us, not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God) by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt:

22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers being made ſubject unto him.

Ver. 5.——In the old time.] Of the Jewiſh Church; ſee ver. 6.

Ver. 6.——And are not afraid with any amazement.] The meaning of which words ſays Biſhop Hall is this: He ſuppoſes the Apoſtle to ſay to the women; "Your ſex is ſubject, by reaſon of the manifold fears and ſuſpicions, as if by ſubmiſſive yielding to your husbands, ye ſhould expoſe your ſelves to tyranny and contempt: But do ye that which your place and duty require, and be not affrighted and diſquieted with theſe doubts and diſtruſts, but leave the ordering of all events to the wiſdom and providence of God." Which interpretation is agreeable to the word amazement, or, as it is in Greek, ptoeſis, which the great Eraſmus renders, a womaniſh fear, which is common to that ſex, without any ſufficient ground or reaſon to occaſion it.

Ver. 7.——According to knowledge] Or, according to thoſe rules which ye have learned from the Goſpel of Chriſt, to love them as your own fleſh, &c.

——Giving honour unto the wife, &c.] The Apoſtle adds two reaſons for this honour which he directs husbands to give to their wives, from whence we muſt alſo learn what that honour is, which is here commanded as a duty of husbands to wives. Therefore

Obſerve, the firſt reaſon is, becauſe ſhe is the weaker veſſel. Honour therefore in regard to this reaſon implies, that husbands muſt give to their wives their due reſpect, as their proper companions, and not abuſe them as ſlaves and vaſſals, as it was too often the caſe in thoſe times, whatever it has been ſince; that they ſhould not only maintain, take care of, and provide for them, but ſhould alſo remember, that though the woman was looked upon by the ſerpent, and was found to be the weaker veſſel, in the temptation of our firſt parents, God hath pardoned her tranſgreſſion, and therefore husbands muſt bear with the infirmities, weakneſſes and failings of their wives, and both pardon them and keep them ſo private, that they may never appear to her diſgrace in the face of the world. But

If we proceed to the ſecond reaſon why husbands are to honour their wives; it is becauſe they are heirs together (with their husbands) of the grace of life. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid: But your wives are alſo accounted in the ſight of God to be worthy of as much honour as you your ſelves, becauſe together with you they are in the covenant of grace, and therefore you muſt uſe them with ſuch reſpect as is due to the heirs of ſalvation; i. e. you muſt love them; for otherwiſe you don't prove your ſelves to be the diſciples of Chriſt.

Ver. 10. For, &c.] As it is written in Pſalm xxxiv. 12, &c. and xxxvii. 27.

Ver. 14.———Of their terror.] Viz. Of thoſe things by which they would terrify you from the faith of Chriſt.

Ver. 19. By which alſo he went and preached unto the ſpirits in priſon. Ver. 20. Which ſometime were, &c.] We have read in the beginning of this chapter to ver. 8. the peculiar and proper duties of man and wife; from thence the Apoſtle treats of common virtues and graces which are required in all Chriſtians, and chiefly exhorts to patience in tribulation, and ſhews how Chriſtians ought to behave themſelves towards their perſecutors; as, that they muſt not be revengeful, nor render evil for evil, ver. 9. nor they muſt not be afraid nor troubled, ver. 14. but ſtrive to baniſh all fear, cowardice, diſorder and perplexity of mind: Nor, in fine, diſguiſe their perſwaſion and opinion, but to make open confeſſion of their religion even before their perſecutors; for that is the meaning of to ſanctify the Lord God in their hearts, &c. as in ver. 15. And then

The Apoſtle tells them, that even this ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith will not ſave them, unleſs accompanied with holy lives, that thereby they may ſhame their adverſaries, who falſly accuſe them as evil doers, ver. 16. Therefore he bids them look to their lives and converſations, that they ſuffer for well-doing, and not for evil-doing, ver. 7. And

For their encouragement he ſets before them the exemplary patience of Chriſt, who ſuffered for our ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt, ver. 18. which remark of his innocence and ſuffering for the guilty highly extols the ſufferings of Chriſt, and at the ſame time implies, that though Chriſtians ſometimes ſuffer for their faith, as they cannot plead an entire freedom from ſin, deſerve in ſome meaſure what they ſuffer; and do no more than their duty, when they ſuffer with patience. And

Now the Apoſtle takes occaſion to expatiate on Chriſt's ſuffering, and the happy effects of it, to the end of this chapter, and in part of the next. He ſhews the deſign of our Saviour's paſſion, viz. that he might bring us to God, ver. 18. that he might make us holy and righteous, and indue us with the divine and godlike nature, and that he might at laſt lead us to Heaven and eternal Glory. And this he was effectually enabled to do, becauſe, though he ſuffered death, yet he ſoon roſe from the dead, as you read in that 18th verſe. Being put to death in the fleſh, but quickned by the Spirit. That this, Jeſus though he ſuffered and was put to death for us in the fleſh, as a man, as he had a human body, yet he was quickned by the Spirit, that is, he roſe from the dead by the virtue and power of the Holy Spirit, who was ever with him. Or thus, he was put to death in the fleſh, i. e. crucified in his human nature, but he was quickned in the Spirit, i. e. he was raiſed from the dead by his Divine Nature. A parallel place is that in 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Though he was crucified through weakneſs, (his body being but weak and frail, and ſubject to death as all human bodies are) yet he liveth by the power of God, he re-aſſumed his ſoul, and lived again, and ſtill liveth by virtue of his Divine Power. He died as man, but reſtored himſelf to life as he was God. It was by Chriſt's Divine Spirit that his ſeparated ſoul and body were re-united: Which you find thus aſſerted by Paul, Rom. i. 4. He was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection from the dead. The human ſpirit of Chriſt was joined again to his body by his eternal Spirit. By Chriſt's Divinity his humanity was raiſed up, and reſtored. And now our Apoſtle enlarges here further upon this quickning power of Chriſt's Spirit or Divinity, in theſe words, By which alſo he went and preached unto the ſpirits in priſon: which ſometime were diſobedient, &c. The Greek which is here tranſlated [by which,] is rendred by others [wherefore:] ἐν ᾧ is as much as ἐφ' ᾧ, ideo, ſaith Oecumenius, and ſo 'tis thought that theſe words bring in the reaſon of what was ſaid before. But there are few that follow this interpretation. Our own tranſlation is more plain, and more probable, for thoſe that are acquainted with the ſtile of the New Teſtament know that [by] is the frequent ſignification of the præpoſition [ἐν:] and it is moſt obvious and rational to refer the article [ᾧ] to the word which immediately preceded it, and that is the Spirit, nor have we any reaſon to think that it relates to any thing elſe. By this Spirit Chriſt did great and wonderful things after he was riſen from the dead: By this he went and preached. But to whom? to the ſpirits in priſon: And moreover it is added, that theſe "ſpirits were ſometimes diſobedient, when once the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah," &c. This is differently underſtood by Expoſitors,

I. It is applied by ſome to thoſe who were alive before or at the flood. And here there are theſe two opinions.

Firſt, Arias Montanus is ſingular and by himſelf, who holds that the ſpirits in priſon were thoſe that were ſhut up, and as it were impriſoned in Noah's ark. Thoſe eight ſouls, as they are called in the 20th verſe, are theſe priſoners: They were kept by God in the ark, as in ſafe cuſtody. But this notion was ſtarted merely becauſe there is mention here of Noah's ark; and the eight ſouls ſaved by it. This without doubt gave the riſe to this wild fancy. And beſides, there are ſeveral things which may hinder us from entertaining it, for, 1. it is ſaid, they were ſometime diſobedient, which we cannot apply to any of theſe eight.

2. The preaching to the ſpirits in priſon here ſpoken of was whilſt the ark was preparing, but they were not impriſoned in the ark till it was made and finiſhed: Therefore this paſſage cannot be underſtood of the perſons ſhut up in the ark.

Secondly, Others underſtand it of thoſe ſinners of the old world who lived all the while the ark was building, which was a hundred and twenty years. The long-ſuffering of God waited thus long on theſe antediluvian ſinners, who are called the world of the ungodly, 2 Pet. ii. 5. Theſe are the ſpirits in priſon, ſay the learned Grotius and Dr. Hammond. And Auguſtin long before had this notion, and the venerable Bede and Aquinas, and others, borrowed it from him. But this opinion is manifeſtly falſe from a proof of the contrary.

Therefore others (ſeeing the levity of this opinion) though they hold that by the ſpirits in priſon are meant the ſinners that lived before the general deluge in Noah's days, yet they underſtand their being in priſon in another ſenſe: As thus, Chriſt by his Spirit in Noah, who is call'd a preacher of righteouſneſs, 2 Pet. ii. 5. did once preach to that generation of men who lived before the flood, whoſe ſpirits are now in priſon, i. e. in Hell for their former diſobedience. Theſe ſpirits were impriſoned in Hell at the time when Peter wrote this Epiſtle, but they were not in that priſon when Chriſt preached to them by the Spirit. The ſhort is, Chriſt preached to theſe men in the days of Noah, who were in this infernal priſon in the days of the Apoſtles, and have been ever ſince. Peter ſpeaks of the ſpirits now in priſon, or then in priſon when he wrote, not of the ſpirits in priſon when Chriſt preached to them. This interpretation is approved of by many, but it is very harſh and much forced. For it you underſtand the words fairly and without ſtraining them, they muſt neceſſarily ſignify ſomething which Chriſt did to the ſpirits in priſon. Now to ſay, they were not in priſon when he did it to them in priſon, is abſurd and ridiculous: At leaſt, it is wreſting the words, and not taking them in their genuine ſenſe which they appear to us in.

II. Others apply it to the ſouls of the dead. And here there is a great difference both among thoſe of the Popiſh and Proteſtant perſwaſion.

Firſt, Eſthius and ſome other Roman Catholicks underſtand this text of Purgatory.

But I anſwer, 1. They muſt evidently prove that there is ſuch a place and ſtate as Purgatory, otherwiſe we have no ground to believe that this text is meant of it. For this being but an obſcure place of Scripture (as all grant) we cannot lay any ſtreſs on it.

2. The patrons of this opinion hold that Chriſt went perſonally to Purgatory, but no ſuch thing is mentioned here; yea, another ſort of going is expreſly named, for it is ſaid, by which, i. e. by the ſpirit he went, which ſeems to exclude a local and perſonal going. 3. How inconſiſtent is this opinion with their doctrine of Purgatory? For they hold that thoſe impure ſouls are ſent to be purged in the other world, who had ſome puniſhment yet remaining to undergo, and who were not ſufficiently purged in this world. But this was not the caſe of the ſinners who periſhed in the flood. Never was there ſuch a puniſhment and judgment, and never ſhall the like be again. And therefore according to the notion of theſe men, thoſe perſons were ſufficiently puniſhed, and there was nothing left to undergo. And then, as to their moral purgation, if thoſe perſons repented at all, it is reaſonable to think that their repentance in thoſe unparallelled circumſtances was exceeding great, and that it proved on all accounts effectual and complete. Thoſe waters were able to cleanſe them ſufficiently, ſo that they needed not to be ſent to theſe purging flames. 4. This is againſt the received opinion of the torments of Purgatory, for they are ſaid to end in a much ſhorter time. The offenders of the old world had lain ſhut up in this priſon almoſt three thouſand years, according to theſe mens interpretation of the text; and yet it is the general doctrine of thoſe that aſſert the pains of Purgatory, that they are much ſooner over, and that it was not intended that theſe torments ſhould be of very long continuance. 5. Why did Chriſt go and take the antediluvian wretches out of the priſon of Purgatory, and none elſe? For theſe are only mentioned here, and we read of no others any where elſe. Why did not our Saviour clear that place, and ſet open the priſon-doors to all, and make a general jail-delivery? Or, will theſe men ſay that none went to Purgatory but thoſe poor creatures who lived in Noah's time? This they will hardly aſſert. Theſe and ſeveral other reaſons may induce us to believe that by the ſpirits in priſon, are not meant the ſouls in Purgatory.

Secondly, ſome imagine that Limbus Patrum is meant here by Peter. Chriſt went to this place, ſay they, and fetched thence all the ſouls of the Saints who died before his coming.

But I anſwer, That there never was ſuch a place for the ſeparate ſouls to go to. This, according to thoſe of the Church of Rome, is that place where the ſouls of the patriarchs and faithful under the Old Teſtament were lodged. But this is a mere fiction, for the ſpirits of the deceaſed Saints go preſently to Heaven, and are not detain'd in any priſon, much leſs ſo long a time, before they reach that place of bliſs. Therefore we ought not to credit the Romaniſts, when they tell us with great confidence, that Chriſt went and preached to Abraham and the reſt of the patriarchs when he left this world, and that he acquainted them that the work of Redemption was finiſhed, and that he took them up with him to Heaven. Let them firſt prove that there was ſuch a priſon (for they confeſs it is now demoliſhed, and hath been ever ſince Chriſt,) and then we ſhall attend to what they ſay, and not before.

Thirdly, There are others who by the ſpirits in priſon underſtand the damned ſpirits or ſouls in hell. Here I will not deny that the word priſon hath reſpect unto the place of the damned: But that Chriſt went into hell, and preached there to the inhabitants of that place, I am not convinced how it can be made good from this text.

For, if hell be not a fixed place or ſtate, if it be not a cloſe priſon, then there is hope that every man at length may be ſet free from it, and walk at large. And this is that which Auguſtin tells us ſome endeavoured to prove from this text, viz. that all ſhall at laſt be freed from hell-torments; De hæreſ. ad Quod vult deum.

But in anſwer to this, and what others have aſſerted, I will briefly make it good, that the words ſpeak not at all of Chriſt's going down to hell, or of his preaching there. For, 1. Theſe words referring to the ſouls of thoſe who lived in Noah's time, what was the reaſon that our Saviour went into hell to preach to theſe rather than the reſt. How came theſe deſpiſers of Noah's preaching to have this privilege above all other perſons, that Chriſt ſhould deſcend to the infernal pit to relieve them particularly? Why did not the Sodomites and others ſhare in the like kindneſs? 2. It is here intimated that the words are not meant of Chriſt's local deſcent into hell, for 'tis ſaid he went by the ſpirit, which ſignifies another thing. 3. It cannot be ſpoken of Chriſt's going to hell, becauſe the words are of ſomething that he did after his Reſurrection. The order of the Apoſtle's words is this, firſt, Chriſt was put to death, then he was quickned or roſe again, and after that he went and preached: Therefore it is impoſſible that this preaching ſhould be meant of any ſort of preaching to thoſe in hell, unleſs you will make Chriſt's deſcent into hell follow his Reſurrection from the dead, which was never dreamt of yet. Let this therefore be remembred, that the text ſpeaks of ſomething which our Saviour did after he was riſen from the dead, and then it muſt be acknowledged, that this is a plain confutation of the adverſaries opinion. 4. This ϖοτὲ ſpoils their interpretation, for when 'tis ſaid they were ſometime diſobedient, it is implied (I do not ſay abſolutely inferred) that they are not ſo now. Neither,

Fourthly, can I ſubſcribe to Calvin's interpretation, who ſays, that Heaven is to be underſtood by this word φυλακὴ in the original, which is not a priſon according to him, but a watch-tower; and ſo indeed the word ſignifies ſometimes. The ſpirits or ſouls of the faithful were ἐν φυλακῇ in ſpecula, on their watch-tower, viz. In Heaven: Thither Chriſt aſcended, and there he found the Saints of the old world very intent on the ſalvation promiſed by Chriſt, they confidently hoped for it and his coming, and as it were looked for theſe as from ſome watch-tower. Theſe are the ſeveral judgments of thoſe Expoſitors who underſtand the words concerning the ſouls of the deceaſed.

III. Others apply theſe words to the preaching of the Goſpel to unbelievers in the Apoſtles times, underſtanding by the ſpirits in priſon, the Heathens, and by Chriſts preaching to them, his ſending his Diſciples and Apoſtles to preach to them, Epiſcopius in Inſtitut. l. 4. c. 30. and Limborch in Theolog. Chriſtian. lib. 3. cap. 13. are the men who offer this interpretation, and I take it to be the faireſt of all thoſe which have been named. But yet as it is delivered by thoſe perſons I cannot wholly ſubſcribe to it: Therefore I ſhall only proceed on the main and general ground which they have laid, and I ſhall make bold to add ſeveral things which I find wholly wanting in thoſe Authors Comments, and thereby give you a perfect reſolution of the text. Firſt then, the ſpirits are the ſame with ſouls, and ſouls are as much as men or perſons with bodies and ſouls: So in the next verſe eight ſouls are ſaid to be ſaved, i. e. eight perſons who were in the ark. This is an uſual Synecdoche: As body is put for the whole man often, ſo ſoul or ſpirit ſignifies the ſame [ſpirit] is not always (though moſt commonly) applied to the ſouls of the deceaſed, as ſome would perſwade us. Living men are call'd ſpirits, 1 Tim. iv. 1. 1 John iv. 1, 3. Seducing ſpirits are ſeducers, or perſons that ſeduce. Or, if you will not grant this interpretation in theſe places, yet you muſt needs grant that perſons may be meant by ſpirits as well as by ſouls, which latter you cannot deny, if you conſult Rom. xiii. 1. and ſeveral other places, where by ſoul is meant a perſon, i. e. a man conſiſting of body and ſoul, or (which is the ſame thing) ſpirit. Or, if ſpirits be meant of the ſouls of dead men properly, then alſo there is reaſon to apply it here, becauſe they are dead in ſin, and they are as it were deſtined to eternal death. Thoſe who are ſpiritually dead are rightly called ſpirits. Theſe ſpirits, i. e. theſe men are no other than the Gentile idolaters (ſay the above named Expoſitor) who lived in the days of Chriſt and the Apoſtles. But I muſt add this, why may we not underſtand theſe words, who were ſometimes diſobedient, of the Jews alſo? For, the text, as I conceive, ſpeaks both of the converſion of Jews and Gentiles, the Goſpel being preached, and ſalvation offered to both theſe. I ſee therefore no reaſon why the expoſition ſhould be confined to one only, viz. to the Pagan Infidels, and ſuch as were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael. Chriſt preached to both Jews and Heathens, who were heretofore, or ſometime diſobedient. The former of theſe, both under the Old and New Teſtament, are noted to be ſuch, they are complained of as a diſobedient people. The forefathers even of thoſe who were in the Apoſtles days were diſobedient, and therefore thoſe may be ſaid to be ſometime diſobedient, becauſe they are included in their forefathers. Or rather, this may be meant of the former lives and manners of thoſe individual perſons who then lived. And as the Jews had lived in ſuperſtition and ignorance, and groſs rebellion againſt God, ſo the Gentiles had been brought up in idolatry, and in moſt lewd and prophane practiſes. Chriſt after his reſurrection and aſcenſion pitied the miſerable condition of both theſe ſorts of vile ſinners. They had been diſobedient, but now Chriſt by his Apoſtles, whom he ſent forth to preach the Goſpel, effectually reminded them of it, of which more anon.

Now, that which we have hitherto ſuggeſted, and which was the firſt thing to be done, is this, that theſe Jewiſh and Pagan people who had heretofore been ſo ſignally diſobedient, are the ſpirits or perſons here ſpoken of, who are alſo ſaid to be in priſon.

Of the reaſonableneſs and conſiſtency of which interpretation I will give you this following account. They are called the ſpirits in priſon.

1. Becauſe they were ſhut up in ignorance, as in a ſpiritual priſon. They refuſed the knowledge of God, and wilfully blinded themſelves, and ſo became, like the Egyptians, priſoners of darkneſs, and lay fettered in the bonds of night, Wiſd. xvii. 2.

2. Becauſe they were not only ſhut up in the dark dungeon of wilful ignorance, but were, as our Church expreſſeth it, tied and bound with the chain of their other groſſer ſins. Whence you read of the cords or chains of ſin, Prov. v. 22. In this reſpect very bad men are ſaid to be in the bond of iniquity, Acts viii. 23. and to be taken captive by Satan at his will, 2 Tim. ii. 26.

3. This expreſſes the miſery they were in. They were ſpirits in priſon, that is, unſpeakably diſtreſſed and wretched. This you will find to be the ſtile of Scripture: And accordingly the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The Lord deſpiſeth not his priſoners, i. e. thoſe that are in diſtreſs and miſery, Pſalm lxix. 33. And thus that in Pſalm lxxix. 11. may be underſtood, Let the ſighing of the priſoners come before thee. And again he prays, Bring my ſoul out of priſon, Pſalm cxlii. 8. Soul is to be taken here for the perſon, and priſon (φυλακὴ is the very word uſed by the Septuagint) for calamity or miſery, and ſo this is the like manner of ſpeech with that in the text, The ſpirits, or ſouls in priſon.

We pity thoſe poor wretches who are in durance, who can only look through the grates, but are denied the liberty of going abroad to help themſelves; we reckon their condition very ſad and deplorable. But

It is certain that theſe poor ſouls who are impriſoned and fettered by their ſins are in a far worſe caſe, becauſe ſin is the greateſt bondage. They, like Samſon, grind in the priſon-houſe, they are put to exceſſive drudgery and ſlavery, which are ſo much the worſe, becauſe they are not ſenſible of it.

4. This ſhews their inability to relieve themſelves. They are as it were in ſome ſtrong and cloſe priſon, whence there is no delivery without God's help, and the ſpecial aſſiſtance of Divine Grace. They are ſhut up in their dark cells, and know not how to free themſelves, they are ſo faſt in priſon that they cannot get forth.

5. And laſtly, As I have before ſuggeſted, hell is call'd a priſon in the ſtile of Scripture. Thus in Matt. v. 25. to be caſt into priſon is to be caſt into hell: And accordingly the Syriack Verſion of the word is ſheol, which is the word uſed ſometimes for hell. God caſt the Angels down to hell, ſaith Peter, and immediately he adds that he delivered them into chains of darkneſs, 2 Pet. ii. 4. and Jude (v. 6.) ſpeaks after the ſame manner. Hell implies chains, and that thoſe who are in that place are bound in the houſe of their priſon. So Satan is ſaid to be bound with a great chain, Rev. xx. 1, 2, i. e. he was confined to hell; and afterwards, he was looſed out of that priſon, v. 7. Now, Wicked and ungodly men are deſervedly ſaid to be in this priſon, even before they are actually caſt into it, becauſe they are as ſure to be there, i. e. to be damned, as if they were actually ſo. They are as certainly to be ſhut up in the priſon of hell, as if they were now in it. In this ſenſe Infidels and unbelievers are ſaid to be condemned already, John iii. 18. All wilful ſinners are clapt up in the priſon, are conſigned, as it were to hell, unleſs they hearken to the preaching of the Goſpel, and repent, and be converted, and ſo eſcape the damnation of hell.

From all theſe particulars you may be ſatisfied how fit an expreſſion this is, how appoſitely thoſe unbelievers and idolaters, to whom the Goſpel was preached, are ſtiled ſpirits in priſon. I will yet further obſerve to you, how the Scripture delights in this way of expreſſion. To this purpoſe we may obſerve the Prophet Iſaiah's words, chap. xlii. 7. where deſcribing the office of the Meſſias, he makes this the ſum of it, to bring out the priſoners from the priſon, and them that ſit in darkneſs out of the priſon-houſe. And again, ſpeaking of the bleſſed deſigu of the Meſſias, he expreſſeth it thus, chap. xlix 9. That thou mayeſt ſay to the priſoners, Go forth. And further in chap. lxi. 1. he introduceth the Meſſias himſelf, declaring with his own mouth, that he was ſent to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound. Which (as well as the former paſſages) is meant of the ſpiritual looſing of men from their ſins, by the ſaving coming of Chriſt, and preaching of the Goſpel, as is evident from what our Saviour ſaid, when he read theſe words of Iſaiah, This day, ſaith he, is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears, Luke iv. 21. As much as if he had ſaid, This is the grand end and purpoſe of my appearing in the world, and of all my undertakings for mankind, namely, to ſet them at liberty, to ſave them from their ſins. This was long ſince foretold by the Prophet Iſaiah, and now behold, it is accompliſhed in me at this time, who ſpeak unto you, and preach the Goſpel of ſalvation. I came to ſeek and ſave that which was loſt, I came to bleſs you in turning you from your iniquities, I came to reſcue you from the bondage of ſin and Satan. This is the meaning of opening the priſon to them that are bound, of ſaying to the priſoners, Go forth, of bringing the priſoners out of the priſon-houſe. We ſee then, that from the ſtile of this Evangelical Prophet we are directed to a right underſtanding of Peter's words, we are informed that the ſpirits in priſon are men in their ſins. Jeſus by his Spirit in his Apoſtles went and preached to theſe priſoners, he proclaimed liberty to theſe poor miſerable captives.

And theſe are the dead to whom the Goſpel was preached, 1 Pet. iv. 6. A place of Scripture which hath mightily puzzled expoſitors. Dr. Hammond and others underſtand by theſe dead the ſinners of the Old World; for theſe were dead (ſay they) when Peter wrote this Fpiſtle, tho' they were alive when they were preached to. But I underſtand it of ſpiritual death, which brings eternal death with it without repentance. The widow that liveth in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth, 1 Tim. v. 6. It is uſual to call ſinners dead men, becauſe (as the ſame Apoſtle ſaith) they are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, Eph. ii. 1. Yea, it were eaſy to ſhew that this way of ſpeaking was not unuſual with the Gentile moraliſts. So the dead here to whom the Goſpel was preached were ſuch as were ſpiritually dead. Otherwiſe you cannot make ſenſe of the reaſon or end of the Goſpels being preached to them, viz. that they might be judged according to men in the fleſh, but live according to God in the ſpirit. Which words contain a plain reaſon, thus, For, this cauſe, viz. that they might be judged aecording to men in the fleſh, i. e. that they might paſs a ſevere judgment upon themſelves, and mortify all their ſinful luſts, but live according to God in the ſpirit, i. e. live new and holy lives, was the Goſpel preached to thoſe that are dead. Here you may obſerve a clear antitheſis in the words; being judged or condemned is oppoſed to living, and fleſh to ſpirit, and according to men to according to God. For this cauſe the Goſpel was preached to them that are dead in ſin, viz. that being once converted they may judge and condemn themſelves, and mortify the fleſh, and die to ſin, (as judging and paſſing ſentence are in order to execution and putting to death among men, or according to men) but be alive to the ſpirit, and walk according to God's holy laws. So then theſe two places mutually explain each other: The dead to whom the Goſpel was preached, are the ſame with the ſpirits in priſon, to whom Chriſt went and preached. In both places are meant the ſpiritually dead, thoſe that are under the power and dominion of their ſins.

Thus I hope I have fully ſhewn who are the ſpirits in priſon. Now it remains that I explain how Chriſt went and preached to theſe ſpirits. The preaching here is not Chriſt's perſonal preaching, but his preaching by his Apoſtles, after his reſurrection, yea his aſcenſion, at which time he ſent his Holy Spirit to them, by which they were enabled to preach the Goſpel to Jews and Gentiles. By which ſpirit, for ἐν ᾧ is as much as δι' ȣ̃, poured forth on his Apoſtles, he preached, i. e. he cauſed them to preach to the unconverted world, Jews and Gentiles, who were yet in their ſins. It is rightly ſaid, that he preached, becauſe what was done by the Apoſtles, Chriſt's miniſters, is ſaid to be done by Chriſt himſelf. And this which is here inſerted, [he went] though it is thought by Dr. Hammond to be a mere expletive, yet it is not ſo, but hath its particular weight and import. Theſe two things, I conceive are ſuggeſted to us by it,

I. The deputation of his Apoſtles. Chriſt went not in his own perſon, but he may be truly ſaid to have gone by his delegates and miniſters. Theſe went, and that from place to place, to preach the Goſpel. I look upon Eph. ii. 17. to be a parallel text with this which I am inſiſting on. He came (or, he went) and preached peace to you who were afar off, viz. to the Epheſians who were Gentiles and idolaters. He came not to theſe in perſon, but he came or went by thoſe whom he ſent to preach to them. Thus, he went, and preached to theſe ſpirits in priſon. So more ſignally he went to the Jews, yea to them indeed firſt, as Peter ſpeaks, Acts iii. 26. Unto you firſt, God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you. God ſent him after his aſcenſion, not him in perſon, but others in his Name to preach repentance, to turn every one of them from their iniquities, as it follows in that place. Thus Chriſt went; he ſent thoſe who went.

II. This ſpeaks the freeneſs of the act. Neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles ſtaid till the Gentiles and Jews ſought for the Goſpel and ſalvation by it, but they went to them, they freely offered theſe to them. The word then is not redundant and ſuperfluous, but very pregnant and emphatical. God offers his grace freely, God the Father ſends, God the Son goes. With what courtſhip and unparalleled addreſs did he ſeek and intreat the love of ſinners whilſt he was here on earth? With what concernedneſs and paſſion did he beſeech and ſollicit the degenerate race of mankind? And when he left this world and went to his Father, behold, he ſent his ſpirit to actuate his Church, eſpecially his Apoſtles, whom he appointed to inſtruct and convert ſouls throughout the whole world. He inſpired them with extraordinary gifts and graces, to make them able to diſcharge their office. And accordingly they did diſcharge it with great power and vigour, with marvellous and unexpected ſucceſs. They preached to the ſpirits in priſon, and that ſo effectually that they ſet them free from their impriſonment.

But here it will be objected, What is this to the purpoſe? What reaſon have you to aſſert that theſe words ſpeak of Chriſt's preaching by his Apoſtles to the unbelievers, both Jews and Gentiles, in thoſe times, when as the text plainly refers to the days of the old world only, for the preaching to the ſpirits in priſon, is ſaid to have been when once the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing? How then can this belong to the times of the Apoſtles, and their preaching to unbelieving Jews and Gentiles? To ſolve this, I have told you already that the words do not altogether refer to thoſe Antediluvian tranſgreſſors, but in a latitude and by way of analogy they comprehend all that have ſometime been diſobedient. For, in theſe words there is an ellipſis, which is a figure that is commonly made uſe of in the Scripture, and therefore it ought not to ſeem ſtrange in this place.

That this ellipſis or leaving out of a word is very frequent, you may ſatisfy your ſelves from thoſe writers who have made it their buſineſs to treat of the ſtile and phraſeology of the Bible; they will let you ſee at one view what a number of defective ſpeeches there are in the Holy Writ. So it is here; and there being a defect, a ſupplement muſt be made. And what is that? The Greek word ὡς, or καθὼς, or ὥσπερ, is to be inſerted before the word ὅτε; and the words are to be read thus, By which he went and preached to the ſpirits in priſon who were ſometime diſobedient, as when once the long-ſuffering, or patience of God waited in the days of Noah. This word as, which is a note of ſimilitude or compariſon, being left out in the Greek, ought to be ſupplied in the tranſlation. That it ought to be ſo, to make the ſenſe entire, will appear by ſetting before you ſome places of Scripture (for I will not trouble you with inſtances of the ellipſis of this particle in prophane writers, though I could produce very many) where this word is left out in the original, but is ſupplied by the tranſlators. As in Gen. xvi. 12. Pagnine inſerts tanquam, and reads it thus, He will be as a wild man. In Pſal. xi. 1. the Septuagint add ὡς, and the vulgar Latin ſicut, and our Engliſh tranſlators as, and read the words thus, Flee as a bird to your mountain, notwithſtanding that adverb is not in the Hebrew; and in many other paſſages of Scripture, which may be omitted, becauſe by theſe you ſee that it hath been thought neceſſary to add this word in ſeveral places of Holy Scripture; which ſame neceſſity is in the text which is before us at preſent. This word as being inſerted, makes the ſenſe clear and manifeſt; for this plainly ſhews that there is a compariſon here between what was done in the Apoſtles days, and what happened in the days of Noah. The long-ſuffering of God in the times of the Apoſtles, was like that in Noah's age. As Chriſt the eternal wiſdom preached by Noah to thoſe who were diſobedient before the flood, ſo he did by the Apoſtles to thoſe who were ſuch in their times. As God heretofore ſhewed an extraordinary patience and mercy towards the people of the old world, giving them a ſufficient ſpace to repent in, no leſs than 120 years, which yet was not improved by them; only a few, hearkning to God's voice, were delivered and ſaved by the ark: So Chriſt was pleaſed to give proof of his ſingular long-ſuffering and kindneſs towards the diſobedient Jews and Gentiles, who lived in the days of the Apoſtles; he by theſe his meſſengers offered grace to thoſe profligate ſinners, ſhut up and conſigned as it were to execution and deſtruction; yet he went and preached the Goſpel to them, and freely tendered the happy fruits of his redemption. But the greateſt part of them evily requited his kindneſs, they continued in their unbelief and impenitence; only there was a ſelect number among them which accepted of the Divine Favour and Mercy, and was ſaved. Thus the ſimilitude or compariſon runs. This word as being added to the text, the ſenſe is obvious and evident, which otherwiſe was very obſcure and uncertain, notwithſtanding what ſome expoſitors have ſaid of it. The text for want of inſerting this note of ſimilitude hath led men to ſeveral fond conjectures and miſtakes, as you have heard; but now it is very clear, and we have not made it ſubſervient to any improbable and abſurd opinions.

This then we are obliged to take notice of in a ſpecial manner, viz. how theſe two are alike, the preaching of Chriſt or the Apoſtles to the unbelievers of that time, and the preaching of Noah to the people of the old world. The likeneſs is mentioned in a general way here; but, to illuſtrate the words, let us take a view of the particulars of it.

1. Here is a parallel between him that preached to thoſe before the flood, and him that preached to the Heathens and Jews under the Goſpel. Or rather indeed this is one and the ſame perſon, Chriſt, the eſſential wiſdom of the Father, God bleſſed for evermore. This is he that preached to the men of all ages. As he ſpake to the people in Noah's time, ſo he did the ſame afterwards, and he ſpake to the unbelievers of the laſt days, Jeſus Chriſt, the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever.

2. He ſpoke to both by the ſpirit. By this he went and preached to them, and by this (even his Eternal Spirit) he hath preached to all generations of men ever ſince the world was. But,

3. This was not an immediate preaching, for as the Son of God made uſe of Noah and his ſons to admoniſh the ſinners before the deluge, ſo he ſtirred up the diſciples and Apoſtles to preach to the Jews and Gentiles in the primitive times of Chriſtianity.

4. Here is a compariſon between the hearers as well as the preachers. As the greateſt part of the men of the old world were diſobedient to Noah's preaching, ſo moſt of the Jews and Heathens were diſobedient to the preaching of the Apoſtles. Yet again, as ſome of the Antediluvians were obedient to the Spirit and Noah's preaching, ſo ſome of the others believed and were converted when the Apoſtles were ſent to them.

5. The parallel is obſervable as to the effect, or rather the conſequence of both preachings; ſome periſhed, others were ſaved. The impenitent and hardned ſinners periſhed in the water, but the family of Noah was by the ſingular mercy of Heaven reſcued from deſtruction.

6. Therefore the compariſon is too evident in the fewneſs of the perſons ſaved on both ſides. This you find particularly taken notice of. As in Noah's days few, that is, eight ſouls were ſaved, ſo when Chriſt came and preached by his Apoſtles and Miniſters, thoſe that believed were but a very ſmall number: a remnant ſhall be ſaved, Rom. ix. 27.

7. And laſtly, Obſerve the analogy between the ark and baptiſm, which were the ſignal attendants of Chriſt's preaching, the one in Noah's, the other in the Apoſtles days. This being particularly mentioned here, I will explain what the Apoſtle means by it. In the ark, ſaith he, eight ſouls were ſaved by water: That is, they were preſerved and delivered out of the water of the deluge: For ſaving by water, is as much as ſaving out of the water: as ſaving by fire, (1 Cor. iii. 15.) is ſaving out of the fire. Or thus, ſaved by water, may be all one with being ſaved by means of the water, viz. by the waves lifting up the ark, and carrying it aloft, and ſo ſaving them from being overwhelmed. The waters of the flood bore up the ark, and thereby kept the perſons in it from drowning. The like figure (or antitype) whereunto, even baptiſm, doth alſo now ſave us, v. 21. That is, the holy ordinance of baptiſm reſembleth the ark in the flood: For as this was the happy means of ſaving Noah and his family, ſo that was appointed by Chriſt under the Goſpel to be the bleſſed inſtrument of ſalvation. Unleſs you will take the word ἀντίτυπον here for a contrary figure (as it ſignifies ſometimes, according to the different rendring of ἀντὶ,) and then the ſenſe is, that ſaving is now by water, as heretofore it was by eſcaping it. The water of baptiſm is now the means of our ſafety, as of old the water of the deluge was the means of deſtruction. Thus the compariſon holds good in all theſe particulars.

Let us then, on whom the ends of the world are come, think our ſelves concerned here. The long-ſuffering of God hath waited in our days, calling us to repentance and amendment of life. O that we may not abuſe this patience of the Almighty, but that we may before it is too late, attend to the preaching of Chriſt by his holy miniſters, and by his Sacred Spirit in our hearts, and that we may be willing to come out of priſon, or to leave our ſins, in which we have been fettered, to be ſet free, and to be ſaved.

CHAP. IV.

1 He exhorteth them to ceaſe from ſin by the example of Chriſt, and the conſideration of the general end that now approacheth, 12 and comforteth them againſt perſecution.

FOraſmuch then as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, arm your ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind: for he that hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſin;

2 That he no longer ſhould live the reſt of his time in the fleſh, to the luſts of men, but to the will of God.

3 For the time paſt of our life may ſuffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in laſciviouſneſs, luſts, exceſs of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries:

4 Wherein they think it ſtrange that you run not with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil of you:

5 Who ſhall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

6 For, for this cauſe was the goſpel preached alſo to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the fleſh, but live according to God in the ſpirit.

7 But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore ſober, and watch unto prayer.

8 And above all things have fervent charity among your ſelves: for charity ſhall cover the multitude of ſins.

9 Uſe hoſpitality one to another, without grudging.

10 As every man hath received the gift, even ſo miniſter the ſame one to another, as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God.

11 If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the oracles of God; if any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be praiſe and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

12 Beloved, think it not ſtrange concerning the fiery tryal, which is to try you, as though ſome ſtrange thing happened unto you:

13 But rejoyce, in as much as ye are partakers of Chriſts ſufferings; that when his glory ſhall be revealed, ye may be glad alſo with exceeding joy.

14 If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye; for the ſpirit of glory, and of God reſteth upon you: on their part he is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

15 But let none of you ſuffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a buſy-body in other mens matters.

16 Yet if any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf.

17 For the time is come that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God: and if it firſt begin at us, what ſhall the end be of them that obey not the goſpel of God?

18 And if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear?

19 Wherfore let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their ſouls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Ver. 1.—He that hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſin.] i.e. He that is dead is freed from ſin; ſee Rom. vi. 7.

Ver. 2. That He.] Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 3.——The will of the Gentiles.] Or, ſuch things, as ahey who have not the bleſſing of God's revealed Will to guide them, are accuſtomed to practice oppoſite to the Will of God; which is mentioned in ver. 2.

Ver. 4. Wherein they.] The Gentiles; ſee ver. 3.

Ver. 6.——To them that are dead.] i. e. To thoſe nations of the Gentiles, who were ſpiritually dead in their ſins; ſee the notes on chap. iii. ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 7. The end of all things is at hand.] According to the Prophecy of Chriſt in Matt. xxiv. 13, 14. ſee the Introduction to this Epiſtle.

Ver. 10.——The gift.] Of riches; which are the gift of God, and will profit thoſe that make the uſe of them, as hereafter preſcribed.

Ver. 11. If any man ſpeak, &c.] See Rom. xii. 6, 7, 8. and 1 Cor. iii. 10.

Ver. 12. Fiery trial.] See 1 Cor. iii. 13.

Ver. 17. The time is come that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God.] viz. Now the time of affliction, which Chriſt foretold before he ſuffered, ſhould come upon his diſciples, is come upon his Church; and take heed that ye fall not away in the day of trial; for we muſt all hereafter be judged at the throne of Divine Majeſty, according to our works; ſee ver. 19.

CHAP. V.

1 He exhorteth the elders to feed their flocks, 5 the younger to obey, 8 and all to be ſober, watchful and conſtant in the faith: 9 To reſiſt the cruel adverſary the devil.

THE elders which are among you, I exhort, who am alſo an elder, and a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and alſo a partaker of the glory that ſhall be revealed:

2 Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the overſight thereof, not by conſtraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

3 Neither as being lords over Gods heritage, but being enſamples to the flock.

4 And when the chief Shepherd ſhall appear, ye ſhall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

5 Likewiſe ye younger, ſubmit your ſelves unto the elder: yea, all of you be ſubject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

6 Humble your ſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

7 Caſting all your care upon him, for he careth for you.

8 Be ſober, be vigilant; becauſe your adverſary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, ſeeking whom he may devour.

9 Whom reſiſt ſtedfaſt in the faith, knowing that the ſame afflictions are accompliſhed in your brethren that are in the world.

10 But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Chriſt Jeſus after that ye have ſuffered a while, make you perfect, ſtabliſh, ſtrengthen, ſettle you.

11 To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

12 By Silvanus a faithful brother unto you (as I ſuppoſe) I have written briefly, exhorting and teſtifying, that this is the true grace of God wherein ye ſtand.

13 The church that is at Babylon elected together with you, ſaluteth you, and ſo doth Marcus my ſon.

14 Greet ye one another with a kiſs of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Chriſt Jeſus. Amen.

Ver. 1. The elders.] i. e. Miniſters and Paſtors of your Churches; ſee ver. 2.

Ver. 3. Lords.] Or, acting with a diſpotic, tyrannical power.

— Enſamples.] Of meekneſs, humility, &c. to your flocks.

Ver. 5.——Unto the elder.] When elder is put in oppoſition to younger, as in this text it ſignifies old men or women, and not miniſters, &c. as in ver. 1.

Ver. 7. Caſting all your care.] How ye ſhall be able to ſuffer for his Name, and to undergo thoſe torments and tortures which the enemy prepares for you; ſee ver. 8, 9.

Ver. 12.——This is the true grace of God, &c.] Even this doctrine of the Goſpel preached to you in the name of Chriſt.

Ver. 13. The Church that is at Babylon.] Where this city was, it is no great matter for us to enquire; this much is certain, it was not Rome; and conſequently Peter did not write this Epiſtle from them, as ſome would pretend.

— Elected together with you.] Who, as you have been, are called to the ſalvation through Chriſt, by the preaching of the Goſpel.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,
ON THE
Second EPISTLE GENERAL
OF PETER.

The INTRODUCTION.

This Epiſtle was written a little before Peter's martyrdom, ch. i. 14. The deſign whereof is much as in the former, to exhort the Chriſtians to continue in the faith, and to prove the reality of their faith by an holy converſation, not turning from the holy commandment. He aſſures them, that he himſelf was a witneſs to Chriſt's transfiguration on the Mount, and that he heard the voice declaring him to be the Son of God.

The Apoſtle alſo warns them againſt falſe teachers and hereticks, who were as vicious in their lives, as deceiving in their doctrine, giving themſelves liberty in all manner of vice and uncleanneſs, deſpiſing government, and by their cunning deviſed fables, endeavouring to poiſon others with their damnable hereſies and impieties; like Balaam who taught Balak how to enſnare the Iſraelites in the committing of fornication and idolatry.

As for thoſe who derided the Chriſtians hope, becauſe things for the preſent continued as they were, the Apoſtle ſhews in ch. iii. that Chriſt's patience was out of kindneſs to reform them; but as the old world was ſurprized in their ſins, and deſtroyed by a flood of water; ſo as certainly Chriſt would come to judgment, when the world ſhould be deſtroyed by fire, and the ungodly periſh: Therefore, he exhorts to holineſs and ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith.

CHAP. I.

1 Confirming them in the hope of the increaſe of Gods graces, 5 he exhorteth them by faith, and good works, to make their calling ſure: 12 whereof he is careful to remember them, knowing that his death is at hand: 16 And warneth them to be conſtant in the faith of Chriſt, who is the true Son of God, by the eye-witneſs of the Apoſtles beholding his Majeſty, and by the teſtimony of the Father, and the Prophets.

SIMON Peter, a ſervant and an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteouſneſs of God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

2 Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, through the knowledge of God, and of Jeſus our Lord,

3 According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godlineſs, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue,

4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promiſes; that by theſe you might be partakers of the divine nature, having eſcaped the corruption that is in the world through luſt.

5 And beſides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge;

6 And to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godlineſs;

7 And to godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs; and to brotherly kindneſs, charity.

8 For if theſe things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye ſhall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

9 But he that lacketh theſe things, is blind, and cannot ſee far off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins.

10 Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election ſure: for if ye do theſe things, ye ſhall never fall:

11 For ſo an entrance ſhall be miniſtred unto you abundantly into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

12 Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of theſe things though ye know them, and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth.

13 Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to ſtir you up, by putting you in remembrance:

14 Knowing that ſhortly I muſt put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath ſhewed me.

15 Moreover, I will endeavour that you may be able after my deceaſe, to have theſe things always in remembrance.

16 For we have not followed cunningly deviſed fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but were eye-witneſſes of his majeſty.

17 For he received from God the Father, honour and glory, when there came ſuch a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount.

19 We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts:

20 Knowing this firſt, that no prophecy of the ſcripture is of any private interpretation.

21 For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 1. Simon Peter, a ſervant.] See the 1ſt Epiſtle, ch. i. ver. 1.

Ver. 3. — Unto life.] Eternal.

Ver. 4. — Promiſes.] Of eternal life through the Goſpel.

Ver. 5. — And to virtue knowledge.] This is a plain command of the Apoſtle to Chriſtians; and therefore I ſhall explain it in this manner:

I. I ſhall conſider the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of knowledge, in order to our paſſing a right judgment on all matters of natural faith, and duty.

II. I ſhall ſhew, that it is our duty, to endeavour, in the uſe of all thoſe means and helps that are afforded us, to increaſe and improve our knowledge as much as is poſſible. Becauſe,

Firſt, Our believing or not believing any matter, depends upon our judgment concerning that matter, whether it be true or falſe.

And here I ſhall once for all obſerve, that according to what ſtate a man is in, as there are various means, ſo there are various degrees of knowledge; and, by conſequence, the judgment of a man concerning any matter, is to be meaſured by ſuch degrees of knowledge as he is capable of, by the uſe and virtue of ſuch means, in ſuch or ſuch a ſtate.

Now, in the ſtate of nature, though men were not without ſome means of knowledge, and ſuch as might enable them to judge of natural things; yet they were only natural means, as the things were which they had to do with, and of which they were to judge: They had the evidence of ſenſe, of reaſon, and their own experience of things, to direct their judgment, as to the truth or falſhood, the good or evil of them. And by ſuch means as theſe, they had a knowledge, ſuch as it was, of their duty to believe and do what ſo appeared to be true and good, and to reject and avoid what appeared to be falſe and evil.

But I am now upon the matter of believing; in order to which, ſome knowledge of the thing to be believed muſt be acknowledged to be neceſſary, and conſequently, uſeful: For whatever is neceſſary to any end, muſt needs be uſeful to that end; ſo that, the uſefulneſs of knowledge, in order either to belief or practice, will be ſufficiently manifeſt, at the ſame time that the neceſſity of it does appear.

Nor is it difficult to make out the neceſſity of knowledge, in order to belief; becauſe every man's own reaſon will convince him of it. For, How can any man believe what he knows nothing of? It was an old objection againſt believing Chriſt to be the Saviour of the world, which Paul ſeems to have been willing to allow, provided it were made upon good ground; How can they believe on him, of whom they have not heard? Rom. x. 14. Now among the ſeveral neceſſary means of knowledge, hearing was one; and the neceſſity of this, infers the neceſſity of ſome knowledge in order to belief.

Add to this, that men are to exert and exerciſe a rational faith, and to this end ought to judge, as they are able, whether the thing be true or falſe, and conſequently, whether it be reaſonable and fit to be believed, before they do believe it: But this they cannot do, without ſome knowledge of the matter. For no man can be judge of any thing that he knows nothing of; nor can any man believe any thing, with reaſon, of which he is not capable of judging in ſome meaſure. In ſhort, our believing, or not believing any matter, depends upon the truth or falſhood of it; and theſe we ought to judge of, according to our meaſure, and the rules we have to do it by: But this we cannot do, unleſs we have ſome knowledge of the matter, by the uſe of ſome or other of thoſe means, which are afforded us, whereby to know it.

Secondly, The neceſſity and uſefulneſs of knowledge will appear, by conſidering, that our doing, or not doing any thing, depends upon our judgment of the nature of that thing, whether it be good or evil.

But how can it be poſſible for any man to judge of the nature of an action, whether it be good or evil, when he knows nothing of the action, of which he is to judge? Our Saviour has informed us very plainly, of the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of knowledge, in order to our doing any duty, by what he ſaid to his diſciples once; If ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them, John xiii. 17. In which words, I ſay, as he plainly aſſerts the neceſſity of doing our duty, in order to our happineſs; ſo he as plainly intimates the neceſſity of knowing our duty, in order to our doing it. Now, by our knowledge of our duty, I underſtand theſe two things; firſt, that knowledge of our duty which we have by information, when we are told that ſuch or ſuch an action is our duty, and therefore, that we ought to do it: And, ſecondly, that knowledge of our duty which we have by reaſon and experience; by either, or by both of which we are convinced, that the information we have had concerning ſuch a thing is true, and therefore, that we are undoubtedly obliged to do that thing, becauſe we have not only the information of another, which, of it ſelf, is more or leſs to be relied on, according to the greater or leſs perfection of the perſon from whom we have received it, but we likewiſe know it to be ſo, as we have been told it is, that is, good, and needful to be done, by the additional ſuffrage of our own judgment, both from the reaſon of the thing, and from its tendency, and the experience we have had of its effects. But whether we receive our knowledge from information, or from reaſon and experience, or from all of them together, is nothing to the buſineſs now before us. That the knowledge of our duty is both highly neceſſary, and very uſeful, in order to our doing of it, appears, I think, ſufficiently plain, from what has been thus briefly offered. And therefore,

I need only mention a third conſideration, whereby the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of knowledge to this purpoſe will appear, namely, that by believing any matter, or doing any thing, which we know nothing of, and of which, by conſequence, we cannot judge, we both believe and act upon no ground; and ſo our faith and practice are not only without reaſon, but dangerous to boot, in that, for ought we know, the former may be error, and the latter ſin. For this appears ſo very plain and evident, upon the bare mention of it, that, I think, it needs no illuſtration.

Therefore, ſince faith and practice make the ſum of all religion, if knowledge be ſo neceſſary to faith and practice, that we can neither believe, nor act as we ought to do, without it, the conſequence muſt needs be this; That knowledge is neceſſary to religion: It is neceſſary to the being of it; and neceſſary to the life and practice of it. For, firſt, Without faith, ſays the Apoſtle, it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. xi. 6. Becauſe faith is an act of the underſtanding, and does neceſſarily ſuppoſe ſome knowledge and apprehenſion of what we believe. And, ſecondly, to all acts of religion there is neceſſarily required ſome act of the underſtanding; ſo that, without knowledge, there can be no devotion in the ſervice of God, nor obedience to his laws. In ſhort, religion begins in the underſtanding, and from thence deſcends upon the heart and life. If ye know theſe things, ſays our Saviour, happy are ye if ye do them, John xiii. 17. We muſt firſt know God, before we can worſhip him; and underſtand what his will is, before we can do it. And now,

II. Secondly, I am to ſhew, that ſince knowledge is ſo neceſſary and uſeful, it is therefore our duty to endeavour, in the uſe of all thoſe means and helps that are afforded us, to increaſe and improve our knowledge as much as is poſſible. And this will appear by conſidering,

Firſt, That as it is the deſire, ſo it is indeed the intereſt, and ſhould be the endeavour of all men, to be as happy as they can be. And ſince we find, by manifold experience, that no man can be compleatly happy in this preſent life, but all muſt look for, and expect perfection of happineſs in another life to come; it concerns us, therefore, to do what in us lies whilſt we live here, that we may deſerve, or be accounted worthy of that happineſs hereafter.

Now, the only way to gain a title to the perfect happineſs of the next life, is by being as religious as we can in this. For, no man can do too much, nay, ſtrictly ſpeaking, none can do enough to purchaſe it. For, eternal life, by which that future happineſs is frequently expreſſed, the Apoſtle tells us, is the gift of God, Rom. vi. 23. And if it be a gift, it is not, neither can be merited by any thing that we can do. But yet, ſince God is pleaſed to tell us what a behaviour he expects of us, that we may engage him to beſtow it on us, according to his promiſe in his Son; this ſhews, that he will give it to none but ſuch as do their beſt to ſerve and pleaſe him; and conſequently, that though none can do enough to merit it, yet all men ought to do ſo much in obedience to the will of God as poſſibly they can, that they may be accounted worthy of it. And to this end, we may conſider,

Secondly, That if we cannot do too much to purchaſe that eternal happineſs, by conſequence, we cannot know too much of what we ought to do towards it. As we are certainly obliged to do as much as we are able, to make our ſelves as happy as we can be; ſo it is neceſſary, to this end, that we endeavour as great perfection of knowledge as we are capable of in this imperfect ſtate. For, though it does not always follow, that the more a man knows, the better and more religious he is; but, on the contrary, it is too often ſeen, that men of deep learning and skill in Sacred Matters, are ſo much more profoundly wicked, by how much they know more than other men: Yet, it is not too much learning makes them mad; it is not from their more abundant knowledge that they are ſo very wicked, but from the manifeſt abuſe of that by which they ſhould be ſo much better, as they are more knowing than their neighbours. And it is of ſuch perſons James ſpeaks, where he tells us, To him that knoweth to do good, and doth it not, to him it is ſin, James iv. 17. That is, ſuch a perſon's ſin is greater than other mens, and he deſerves a heavier puniſhment, in proportion to the meaſure of his knowledge.

It is with knowledge, as with wealth, and other temporal endowments; the more any man has, the more good he is capable of doing; and if he is not willing to do good according to his ability, it is his greater fault, and he muſt expect to meet with a ſeverer doom. So knowledge is a treaſure in the underſtanding, by which, according to its meaſure, a man is more or leſs enabled to a right performance of his duty; and the greater ſtock of knowledge any man has, the greater perfection of obedience is expected of him: And if he does not uſe this treaſure, as God, who has entruſted him therewith, expects he ſhould, he will undoubtedly be ſo much more ſeverely dealt with when he comes to make up his accounts. So that, as according to our Saviour's rule, whatever we know to be our duty, we ought to be careful to do it, in order to our happineſs; ſo the better and more perfectly any man knows his duty, the better and more perfectly he ought to perform it.

performance

And if all men ought to be religious in proportion to their knowledge, and all men ought to know as much as they are capable of knowing, that they may do what in them lies towards working out their own ſalvation, becauſe none can do too much to purchaſe it; it follows, that all men ought to labour for, and aſpire after more and greater knowledge than they have already, and to endeavour the increaſe and improvement of their knowledge to this end, in the uſe of all ſuch means and helps as are afforded them in order thereunto, as it is here intended by the Apoſtle.

CHAP. II.

1 He foretelleth them of falſe teachers, ſhewing the impiety, and puniſhment both of them and their followers: 7 from which the godly ſhall be delivered, as Lot was out of Sodom: 10 and more fully deſcribeth the manners of thoſe prophane, and blaſphemous ſeducers, whereby they may be the better known, and avoided.

BUT there were falſe prophets alſo among the people, even as there ſhall be falſe teachers among you, who privily ſhall bring in damnable hereſies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction.

2 And many ſhall follow their pernicious ways, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of.

3 And through covetouſneſs ſhall they with feigned words make merchandiſe of you: whoſe judgment now of a long time lingreth not, and their damnation ſlumbreth not.

4 For if God ſpared not the angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto judgment;

5 And ſpared not the old world, but ſaved Noah the eighth perſon, a preacher of righteouſneſs, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly;

6 And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an enſample unto thoſe that after ſhould live ungodly;

7 And delivered juſt Lot, vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked:

8 (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in ſeeing and hearing, vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day, with their unlawful deeds)

9 The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed:

10 But chiefly them that walk after the fleſh, in the luſt of uncleanneſs, and deſpiſe government: Preſumptuous are they, ſelfwilled, they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities:

11 Whereas angels which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accuſation againſt them before the Lord.

12 But theſe, as natural brute beaſts, made to be taken and deſtroyed, ſpeak evil of the things that they underſtand not, and ſhall utterly periſh in their own corruption;

13 And ſhall receive the reward of unrighteouſneſs, as they that count it pleaſure to riot in the day-time: ſpots they are and blemiſhes, ſporting themſelves with their own deceivings, whilſt they feaſt with you;

14 Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot ceaſe from ſin; beguiling unſtable ſouls: an heart they have exerciſed with covetous practices; curſed children:

15 Which have forſaken the right way, and are gone aſtray, following the way of Balaam the ſon of Boſor, who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs;

16 But was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb aſs ſpeaking with mans voice, forbad the madneſs of the prophet.

17 Theſe are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempeſt, to whom the miſt of darkneſs is reſerved for ever.

18 For when they ſpeak great ſwelling words of vanity, they allure through the luſts of the fleſh, through much wantonneſs, thoſe that were clean eſcaped from them who live in error:

19 While they promiſe them liberty, they themſelves are the ſervants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage.

20 For if after they have eſcaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, they are again intangled therein and overcome; the latter end is worſe with them than the beginning.

21 For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, than after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

22 But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, The ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire.

Ver. 1. —— Among the people.] Of God, i. e. The Jews or Iſraelites; ſee Deut. xiii. 1.

—— Even as there ſhall be, &c.] According to Chriſt's prophecy, Matt. xxiv. 11. See alſo, Acts xx. 30. 1 Cor. xi. 19. 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1, 5. 1 John iv. 1. Jude 18.

Ver. 2. Their pernicious ways.] i. e. The will or ways of falſe teachers, and of the Gentiles, as deſcribed in the 1ſt Epiſtle, ch. iv. ver. 3, &c. See the notes on the following chapter.

Ver. 4. For if God ſpared not the Angels, that ſinned, but caſt them down to hell, &c.] The Apoſtle here ſpeaks of the devils, lucifer and his angels, who had rebelled againſt God; and he does not ſay that they were encloſed or ſhut up in hell, nor that they are ſubject as yet to hell-torments, for we know that they are repreſented in other parts of Scripture to have their manſions in the air, and about the earth, and this very Apoſtle compares the Devil to a lion, walking about and ſeeking whom he may devour, 1 Epiſtle v. 8. and Paul ſtiles Satan, the chief of the devils, the prince of the air, Eph. ii. 2. The devils alſo cried out to Chriſt, Art thou come to torment us before our time? Therefore, the Apoſtle's meaning in this place is, that God had adjudged them to helliſh torments, and ſo delivered them to be reſerved in the air for chains of darkneſs at the day of judgment, like as at ver. 9. The Lord knoweth how to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed, and ver. 17. to whom the miſt of darkneſs is reſerved for ever, as a condemned criminal is reſerved in a dungeon till his execution; ſee Grotius and Dr. Wells, in Loc. and Mede, book i. diſc. 4.

Ver. 5. — The old world.] i. e. The world of creatures before the deluge.

—— A preacher.] To thoſe wicked people of the old world, whoſe ſins brought down God's vengeance upon the earth in a deluge of water, when only ſeven more beſides Noah were ſaved in his ark, who is therefore called the eighth perſon; ſee Gen. vii. 1, 7, 23.

Ver. 6. —— Sodom and Gomorrha, &c.] See Gen. xix. 24.

Ver. 7. Delivered juſt Lot.] See Gen. xix. 16.

Ver. 9. Reſerve, &c.] See the note on ver. 4.

Ver. 20. —— The latter end is worſe with them than the beginning.] Or, Theſe men who had been in the beginning of their days accuſtomed to do evil under a corrupt education, were then more excuſable in the ſight of God for their evil deeds, than they ſhall be now; becauſe they having been called to, and embraced the faith and doctrines of Chriſt, are fell away, and can no longer plead ignorance of their duty; and therefore, if they continue and die in this evil way of their own inventions, their latter end will bring them to a much worſe ſtate in the next world, than if they had continued through ignorance in the prejudice of their education; for to whom much is given, of the ſame much is required, and they that have known the will of the Father, and not done it, ſhall be beat with many ſtripes, &c. See what follows, at ver. 21, 22.

CHAP. III.

1 He aſſureth them of the certainty of Chriſts coming to judgment, againſt thoſe ſcorners who diſpute againſt it: 8 warning the godly for the long patience of God, to haſten their repentance. 10 He deſcribeth alſo the manner how the world ſhall be deſtroyed: 11 exhorting them from the expectation thereof, to all holineſs of life: 15 And again, to think the patience of God to tend to their ſalvation, as Paul wrote to them in his Epiſtles.

THIS ſecond epiſtle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I ſtir up your pure minds by way of remembrance:

2 That ye may be mindful of the words which were ſpoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour:

3 Knowing this firſt, that there ſhall come in the laſt days ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts,

4 And ſaying, Where is the promiſe of coming? for ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

5 For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth ſtanding out of the water, and in the water.

6 Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, periſhed.

7 But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the ſame word are kept in ſtore, reſerved unto fire againſt the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men.

8 But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day.

9 The Lord is not ſlack concerning the promiſe (as ſome men count ſlackneſs) but is long-ſuffering to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance.

10 But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat, the earth alſo and the works that are therein ſhall be burnt up.

11 Seeing then that all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs,

12 Looking for and haſting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſolved, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat?

13 Nevertheleſs, we according to his promiſe, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs.

14 Wherefore, beloved, ſeeing that ye look for ſuch things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without ſpot, and blameleſs:

15 And account that the long-ſuffering of our Lord is ſalvation; even as our beloved brother Paul alſo, according to the wiſdom given unto him, hath written unto you;

16 As alſo in all his epiſtles, ſpeaking in them of theſe things: in which are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt, as they do alſo the other ſcriptures, unto their own deſtruction.

17 Ye therefore, beloved, ſeeing ye know theſe things before, beware leſt ye alſo, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs.

18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Ver. 11. Seeing then that all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs.] The author of this Epiſtle, as I have ſhewn in the Introduction, intends thereby to confirm the Chriſtians, to whom he writes, in the truths of the Goſpel, and exerciſe of all piety; he puts them in mind of the promiſes, and ſtirs up their graces; he warns them of a judgment to come, and then exhorts to Godlineſs, as in ch. i. ver. 4. Then in the ſecond chapter he warns them of falſe teachers, particularly the Gnoſticks, who, under the ſhew of greater perfection, introduced among Chriſtians moſt deſtructive doctrines of liberty and licentiouſneſs; and alſo of Simon Magus, and the Carpocratians, who mixed Paganiſm with Chriſtianity. And in this laſt chapter he ſays, he writes to them now this ſecond time, only to ſtir up their pure minds by way of remembrance; that they may be ever mindful of the words and commands of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and well aſſured of a future judgment, which will come unexpectedly and ſurprizingly: From all which premiſes, and not only that of a judgment to come, and the diſſolution of the world, he draws this general concluſion, What manner of perſons then ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs? That is, how prudent, virtuous, accurate, diligent, temperate, chaſte, patient, zealous, charitable, and every way excellent perſons? For the Greek word (ποταπȣς, ſignifying much more than ποιȣ͂ς tranſlated what manner of perſons, is often uſed in the New Teſtament by way of admiration of ſome ſingular excellency in perſons or things; thus, Matt. viii. 27. They marvelled, ſaying, what manner of man is this, that even the wind and ſea obey him? That is, what extraordinary wonderful perſon is this? So in Mark xiii. 1. Maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones and buildings are here? That is, how ſtately, how magnificent? And not to add more, in 1 John iii. 1. Behold, what manner of love the Father has beſtowed on us; how ſurprizing love, what aſtoniſhing kindneſs, that we ſhould be called the Sons of God?

—— In all holy converſation and godlineſs.] In the original the words are in the plural number, (according to a known Hebraiſm) in all holy converſations and godlineſs; implying not ſingle acts, no intermitting fits of piety, but a continued uninterrupted courſe of holy walking through our whole time, an unwearied diligence in the performance of all ſorts of duties, and exerciſe of every grace wherewith the Spirit of God furniſhes believers. And ſuch the firſt Chriſtians generally were, perſons moſt remarkably exemplary in every kind of virtue, of whom we have the following accounts for our example. Pliny the younger, governor of Bythinia, being commanded by the emperor Trajan to give him a faithful account of the Chriſtians, tells him in his Epiſtle, L. 10. Ep. 97. That after the beſt eſtimate and ſtricteſt inquiſition he could make even by tortures, he found no worſe of them than this, that they were wont to meet early for the performance of their ſolemn devotions, and there to bind themſelves under the moſt holy obligations or ſacraments to commit no manner of vice or wickedneſs. Serenus Granianus, pro-conſul of Aſia, writes to Adrian, Trajan's ſucceſſor, to repreſent to him how unjuſt it was to perſecute Chriſtians, when no crime could ever be duly laid to their charge. See Euſeb. Ec. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 8, 9.

Next to Adrian, Antoninus Pius, in his Epiſtle to the commons of Aſia, tells them, that they had traduced the Chriſtians, and objected crimes to them which they never were guilty of; that they were more firm and undaunted in their profeſſion than themſelves, and had a greater freedom with and confidence towards God. See Juſtin. Martyr. Apol. 2.

After him comes Marcus Antoninus, who having obtained a ſignal victory againſt the Quadi in Germany, confeſſes in his letter to the ſenate, that he thinks it gotten by the prayers and holy lives of the Chriſtians which he had in his army.

Trypho the Jew, in his dialogue with Juſtin Martyr, clears them of all aſperſions that could be charged upon their lives and manners, and owns the precepts of the Goſpel to be ſo great and admirable, that they would make men divine creatures, could they live up to them. See Juſt. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 227.

And the emperor Conſtantine affirms; (ſee Euſ. de vit. Conſtan. l. 2. c. 50, 51.) that when he was a young man, and in company with Diocleſian at the oracle of Delphos, he heard Apollo, or the Devil, giving forth his oracles, not as he was wont by human voice, but out of a dark and obſcure cavern, and confeſſing that it was becauſe of the juſt men who lived upon the earth; and when Diocleſian enquired who thoſe juſt men were, one of the Heathen prieſts that ſtood by anſwered, that they were the Chriſtians. Thus did the force of truth extort teſtimonies out of the mouths of perſecuting emperors, blaſpheming Jews, and even Satan himſelf, in in favour of the innocency of the firſt Chriſtians, of their holy coverſation and godlineſs.

Clemens, in his firſt Epiſtle, tells the Corinthians; "Who did ever dwell among you, that did not approve of your excellent and unſhaken faith? that did not wonder at your modeſt and becoming piety? You were forward in every good work, adorned with a moſt virtuous and venerable converſation, doing all things in the fear of God, and having his laws and commands written upon the tables of your hearts." They placed religion not in talking or profeſſing, but in living. "Among us, (ſays Athenagoras, Leg. pro Chriſt) the meaneſt perſons, tho' perhaps not able to diſcourſe or diſpute, yet fully demonſtrate their Holy Religion in their lives and actions: They do not indeed make fine ſpeeches, but they manifeſt their faith by good works."

Clemens Alexandrinus gives this account of them; "As the faireſt poſſeſſion, we offer up our ſelves to God, intirely loving him, and reckoning this the great buſineſs of our lives. No man is with us a Chriſtian, but he that is pious and religious; nor does any further bear the image of God, than as he acts, and ſpeaks, and believes, what is juſt and holy. Such as are our deſires, ſuch is our diſcourſe; ſuch as are our diſcourſes, ſuch are our actions; and ſuch as our actions are, ſuch is our whole life; ſo univerſally good is the life of Chriſtians," Adm. ad Gent. Certainly none ever were greater enemies to a naked profeſſion, and the covering of a bad life under the title of Chriſtianity. "Does any man live otherwiſe than Chriſt has commanded? (ſays Juſtin Martyr, Apolog. 2. before the emperors) it is a moſt certain argument that they are no Chriſtians, though with their tongues they never ſo ſmoothly profeſs the Chriſtian doctrine; for not mere profeſſors, but they who live according to their profeſſion, ſhall be ſaved." "Let no man (ſays Baſil, in cap. 1. Eſaiæ.) impoſe upon himſelf with ſenſeleſs words, ſaying, though I be a ſinner, yet I am a Chriſtian, and, I hope, that title will be my ſhelter; but hearken, O ſinner, ſays he, all wicked men ſhall be bundled up together, and, in the great day of the Divine Vengeance, ſhall be indifferently thrown into thoſe merciless and devouring flames." To the ſame purpoſe Athenagoras, in his embaſſy, tells the Heathen emperors; "Let but any of us be convict of any crime, either ſmall or great, and we refuſe not to be puniſhed; nay, are ready to undergo the moſt cruel and heavy penalty." And Minutius Fœlix, talking to Cæcilius an Heathen, ſays; "Should we Chriſtians be compared with you, as to virtuous living, how infinitely do we tranſcend you? You forbid adultery, and then practiſe it; we are intirely chaſte: You puniſh wickedneſs when committed; with us, even a wicked thought is ſin: You ſtand in awe of thoſe who are conſcious of your crimes, we of nothing but God and our own conſciences. It is with your party that the priſons are filled and crowded; no Chriſtian is there, unleſs ſuch a one as either a ſhame to his religion, or an apoſtate from it. Do but compare our loweſt Chriſtian with your beſt philoſophers, who are only eloquent againſt thoſe vices of which themſelves are often guilty; but we meaſure not wiſdom by mens ſpeeches or habits, but by their minds and tempers; we do not ſpeak great things, but live them; having this to boaſt of, that we really attain to that virtue, which they earneſtly ſought, but could not find. Lactantius, in Inſtit. l. 5. c. 9. having excellently diſcourſed of the prodigious debaucheries and wickedneſs of the Heathens, "Which of theſe things, ſays he, can be objected to our people, whoſe whole religion it is to live without ſpot or blemiſh?" Euſebius tells us, that in his time the Chriſtian faith had by gravity, ſincerity, modeſty, and holineſs of life, conquered all oppoſition; that it rendred men meek, ſpeakers of truth, charitable, kind, and helpful to all: And all the primitive writers do agree, that no bad man could be a Chriſtian, unleſs he were an hypocrite; that when men depart from the diſcipline of the Goſpel, they ceaſed among them to be accounted Chriſtians; and that they did not admit ſuch to the offices of religion, who had tranſgreſſed the laws of it.

But to deſcend to particulars: The firſt Chriſtians always came into the Church, as into the palace of the Great King, (as Chryſoſtom ſays, in Hom. 15. in c. ix. Ep. ad Hebr.) with fear and trembling, with modeſty and gravity, and behaved themſelves while there with the moſt profound reverence ſilence, and devotion. They did not think it enough to read, and pray, and praiſe God, at home; but made conſcience of appearing in the publick aſſemblies, from which nothing but ſickneſs or abſolute neceſſity could detain them; and if perſecuted, impriſoned or baniſhed, the greateſt trouble they had was, that they could not come and join their devotions with their brethren in the common ſervices.

The Lord's day among them was moſt ſolemnly obſerved; private and publick devotions, conſtant attendance upon the houſe of the Lord, and the exerciſe of every Chriſtian virtue, were the whole employment of it.

All the other eſtabliſhed feſtivals and faſts of the Church were kept with the like ſtrictneſs. Nothing but ſupplications and prayers, pious hymns and meditations, with all the ſincere ſigns of true devotion, diligent attention to the reading or explaining of God's Word, with acts of charity and mercy, were the whole buſineſs of thoſe ſolemn times.

In their families, they had alſo their ſtated morning and evening ſervices, with reading of the Scripture and Pſalms; beſides their ſet times for private devotion.

The Holy Euchariſt, a ſacrament ſo ſolemnly inſtituted by our Saviour, and of ſuch great importance in the Chriſtian Religion, they received at firſt almoſt every day, while the ſpirit of the Goſpel, was yet warm and vigorous, and the hearts of men paſſionately inflamed with the love of Chriſt; and it never in thoſe primitive times was ſeldomer communicated than every Lord's day, nay, the greateſt curſe that could be inflicted upon them, was to be debarred the participation of it.

They then thought too, that an high reſpect and reverence for the miniſters of religion, was a neceſſary and grateful expreſſion of their piety to God; they looked upon them as God's embaſſadors, as the moſt valuable bleſſings, and reckoned every indignity offered to them, any violation of their rights and poſſeſſions, among the ſins of ſacrilege.

It would be endleſs to collect out of the primitive writers all the accounts that may be met with, of their humility, their contempt of riches and the world, their temperance and ſobriety, their chaſtity, their courage and conſtancy in aſſerting and owning the truths of the Goſpel, and their exemplary patience under ſufferings. They ſo ſtrictly obſerved our Saviour's golden rule, (of doing as they would be done by, and rendring to every one his due) that they ſcarce thought it lawful to go to law to defend their own right.

Their juſtice and integrity in all matters of commerce and traffick, their candour and ſimplicity in their words, abhorring all lyes and mental reſervations, though to ſave their own lives: Their veracity ſo great, that Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, in Strom. l. 7. it was counted a diſparagement to a Chriſtian's fidelity and truth, to be put to his oath: Their admirable love and charity (that new commandment which our Saviour ratified with his own ſolemn ſanction) ſo remarkable, that the Heathens cried out with admiration, See how theſe Chriſtians love one another: Their zeal for unity, and peaceableneſs, contributing all they could to promote quietneſs in the world, to avoid all quarrels and diſſenſions, and never joining in parties or factions.

In ſhort, they were ſo eminent for the practice of every ſocial virtue, that the Heathen writers of morality in their time, did in a manner reform their philoſophy; and, as aſhamed that their precepts ſhould be outdone by the lives of illiterate Chriſtians, raiſed their ſtyle, altered their ſyſtems, and tranſcribed from their practices the Divine Precepts of their religion.

I will only add one word more concerning the ſtrictneſs of their repentance; when either through infirmity or temptation they fell into ſin, Tertullian, de Pæn. c. 8. & 11. thus deſcribes it; they neither waſhed nor trimmed, were neglected and unclean, taking no delight in any thing, living in the roughneſs of ſackcloth, and the filth and harſhneſs of aſhes; their faces disfigured with faſting, their minds dejected with grief, their only nouriſhment being bread and water, not to ſatisfy nature, but to keep up life; that they did, as it were, nouriſh and ſtrengthen their prayers and diſcipline with the ſtricteſt abſtinence; that they groaned, and wept, and roared to the Lord their God day and night; that they fell down at the feet of the presbyters, kneeled in the porch of the Church to the friends of God, and paſſionately begged of all the brotherhood to intercede for them.

This is a very imperfect sketch or picture (which might be much enlarged from ancient writers) to ſhew you what manner of perſons the primitive Chriſtians were in all holy converſation and godlineſs: And to this example we are exhorted in the words of Peter in this text before us.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,
ON THE
Firſt EPISTLE GENERAL
OF
JOHN.

The INTRODUCTION.

This John was one of the twelve Apoſtles, and the author of the Goſpel of John. This Epiſtle was deſigned to inſtruct, comfort and encourage the Primitive Chriſtians; and more particularly the Jewiſh converts; that their joy might be full, in relying on the Son of God; for he is faithful and juſt, to make good his Word, and promiſe to forgive us, foraſmuch as he is the propitiation for our ſins, if we believe in him, and for the future keep his commandments.

The Chriſtians of that age were in danger of being ſeduced by ſome deceivers, the ſpawn of Simon Magus. He himſelf, and ſome of his party, denied that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Meſſiah, or Chriſt; chap. ii. 22. Some of the hereticks denied the human nature of Chriſt, or that Chriſt was come in the fleſh; chap. iv. 2, 3. They pretended that Chriſt did ſeem to be a man, and to die; but was not ſo in reality, but in appearance only.

Another ſort of heritical deceivers were contrary to the former, who denied the Divine Nature of Chriſt, pretending that he was only bare man, not the Son of God, and believed not the record that God gave of his Son, who is the true God and eternal life, (or the Author of eternal life, as he is here deſcribed to be) chap. v. 10, 11. 12,--20. Againſt ſuch John wrote ſome part of his Goſpel; and now in this Epiſtle aſſures the true Chriſtians, that he was one of thoſe who had heard and ſeen the Lord Jeſus, the Word of life, (by whom is revealed to us the Goſpel of life and ſalvation) and converſed with him being a witneſs both of his real manhood, and of the miraculous power whereby he was evidenced to be Son of God, and the true God and that the deceivers before-mentioned, and all their followers were antichriſts, (oppoſers of Chriſt.) John earneſtly warns the Chriſtians to beware of all ſuch; and tells them, that the unction, or anointing, which they had received, i. e. the miraculous effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, was ſufficient to convince them of, and teach them the truth in Chriſt.

Again ſome of theſe deceivers, the followers of Simon Magus, pretended that a bare faith would ſave without holineſs, and allowed themſelves in many enormous ſins; ſee Ireneus. lib. 1. c. 1. and cap. 20. cum notis grabii. Therefore the Apoſtle cautions the Church againſt them; for every one who rightly hopes in Chriſt, purifieth himſelf, and whoſoever is born of God, or formed into a new nature, and endued with his ſpirit, doth not commit ſin, i. e. doth not go on in any habitual way of ſin; for, his ſeed, the Holy Spirit, remaineth in him; and, in a manner, he cannot commit ſin; becauſe he is born of God, 1 John iii. 3, 9. being become a new creature, and thereby having, as it were, a new nature; his mind and temper, and inclinations being quite changed for the better; ſo that now to commit wilful ſin, is now loathſome and contrary to the genius and temper of his ſoul, to his inclination and diſpoſition, as we ſay of a generous man, that he cannot do a baſe action, and it is become the bent of his very nature to pleaſe God, and to be careful not to offend him by ſin. But he that committeth ſin, or that liveth and walloweth in the practice and ſtench of any wilful habitual ſins, and ſeeks not for pardon by holy reſolutions and repentance, through the merits of Chriſt, is of the devil, ver. 8. ſo that all true Chriſtians muſt abandon and avoid all evil courſes, and ſhew their love to Chriſt, by keeping his commandments; eſpecially by maintaining true cordial love one towards another, ch. iv. 7, 8, 9.

In this Epiſtle, John gives an illuſtrious proof of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, chap. v. 7. There are three that bare record, (or witneſs) in Heaven, the Father, the Word, (or Son,) and the Holy Ghoſt, and the Father are one; which words are omitted in ſome ancient copies, probably, becauſe in the original the ſame words, which we tranſlate, there are three that bear record, or witneſs, ver. 7. are repeated, ver. 8. ſome careleſs tranſcriber (poſſibly in the early ages of Chriſtianity after, whom others copied) having wrote, there are three that bear record, ver. 7. happened, to leave out the remaining part of the 7th verſe, and ſo far of the beginning of the 8th verſe, till he came to look upon the ſame words in the 8th verſe, there are that bear record, or witneſs (for it is the ſame word in the original Greek, which is tranſlated record in the 7th verſe, and witneſs in the 8th verſe) the two verſes are thus, ver. 7. For there are three that bear record [in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are one, ver. 8. And there are three that bear record] in earth, the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood, and theſe three agree in one, where we ſee, how eaſily the tranſcriber (whoſe livelihood was gotten by tranſcribing books, before the invention of printing, and therefore, who may well be preſumed to write faſt) might omit all thoſe words of the 7th verſe, and part of the 8th verſe, which are between the crotchets, as above, by looking on the ſame words of the 8th verſe which he had juſt before wrote down out of the 7th verſe, viz. there are three that bear record, and ſo go on to, in earth the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood, ver. 8. inſtead of in Heaven and the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 7. But,

Be this as it will, it is certain thoſe words of the 7th verſe, are quoted in ſubſtance by Tertullian, adv. Praxeam, c. 25. In whoſe time the very authentic Epiſtles of the Apoſtles were extant; and alſo twice by Cyprian, who are of much greater antiquity than the copies, wherein they are omitted, and who lived before Arius; and therefore, it cannot be pretended they framed them to ſerve the Trinitarian cauſe; but on the other hand it appears from them, that in their time (about the cloſe of the ſecond century, and the beginning of the third) thoſe words were found in John's Epiſtle; ſee Cyprian, de unitate ecclæ. & epiſt. ad jubaianum, and Dr. Mills, ad finem Epiſtolæ primæ Joannis, page 742. And indeed without them, the argument of John ſeems very imperfect; for as, ver. 9. the witneſs of men refers to the witneſs on earth, mentioned ver. 8. ſo the witneſs of God refers to the record, or witneſs in Heaven, mentioned ver. 7.

What the ſin unto death is, ch. v. 16. the remiſſion of which the Apoſtle doth not ſay, that the firſt Chriſtians ſhould pray for, he hath not particularly mentioned. In the ancient Church, a deliberate of heinous ſins of idolatry, murder, and adultery, debarred the ſinners from the communion of the Church; perhaps the Apoſtle intended the obſtinate and incorrigible offenders in ſuch kinds, who after admonition ſtill perſiſted and refuſed to ſubmit to the diſcipline of the Chutch, there being no hopes of cure of that ſick ſoul, who refuſes to ſubmit to a proper phyſician appointed by God; ſo we call a diſeaſe particularly mortal, or unto death, when there are no hopes of recovery. Others believe the ſin unto death to be a total apoſtacy from the Chriſtian faith, joined with a malicious blaſpheming of the Spirit and Word of God, (as the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt in Matt. xii. 31. which Chriſt ſays, ſhall not be forgiven). For, too many of the Jews, at that time, relapſed to Jewdaiſm, renouncing Chriſt, and blaſpheming the Holy Spirit, which ſo miraculouſly teſtified of him by many ſigns and wonders; whom Paul ſays, it is impoſſible to renew again to repentance, Heb. vi. 4, &c. ſo they are guilty of the ſin unto death, who are either obſtinate apoſtates, or continue hardened incorrigible ſinners in other reſpects.

CHAP. I.

1 He deſcribeth the perſon of Chriſt, in whom we have eternal life, by a communion with God: 5 to which we muſt adjoin holineſs of life, to teſtify the truth of that our communion and profeſſion of faith, as alſo to aſſure us of the forgiveneſs of our ſins by Chriſt's death.

THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have ſeen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life;

2 (For the life was manifeſted, and we have ſeen it, and bear witneſs, and ſhew unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifeſted unto us)

3 That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us: and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

4 And theſe things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

5 This then is the meſſage which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all.

6 If we ſay that we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in darkneſs, we lye, and do not the truth:

7 But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowſhip one with another, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.

8 If we ſay that we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us.

9 If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs.

10 If we ſay that we have not ſinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

CHAP. II.

1 He comforteth them againſt the ſins of infirmity. 3 Rightly to know God, is to keep his commandments, 9 to love our brethren, 15 and not to love the world. 18 We muſt beware of ſeducers: 20 from whoſe deceit the godly are ſafe preſerved by perſeverance in faith and holineſs of life.

MY little children, theſe things write I unto you, that ye ſin not. And if any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous:

2 And he is the propitiation for our ſins: and not for ours only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world.

3 And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

4 He that ſaith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But whoſo keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6 He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked.

7 Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning: the old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: becauſe the darkneſs is paſt, and the true light now ſhineth.

9 He that ſaith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkneſs even until now.

10 He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occaſion of ſtumbling in him.

11 But he that hateth his brother, is in darkneſs, and walketh in darkneſs, and knoweth not whither he goeth, becauſe that darkneſs hath blinded his eyes.

Ver. 1. That.] Truth and commandment; ſee ver. 5, &c. and ch. ii. ver. 7—26.

12 I write unto you, little children, becauſe your ſins are forgiven you for his names ſake.

13 I write unto you, fathers, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, becauſe ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, becauſe ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, becauſe ye are ſtrong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15 Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

16 For all that is in the world, the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

17 And the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: but he that doth the will of God, abideth for ever.

18 Little children, it is the laſt time: and as ye have heard that antichriſt ſhall come, even now are there many antichriſts; whereby we know that it is the laſt time.

19 They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifeſt, that they were not all of us.

20 But ye have an unction from the holy One, and ye know all things.

21 I have not written unto you, becauſe ye know not the truth: but becauſe ye know it, and that no lye is of the truth.

22 Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jeſus is the Chriſt? He is antichriſt, that denieth the Father and the Son.

23 Whoſoever denieth the Son, the ſame hath not the Father: [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father alſo.

24 Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the begining, ſhall remain in you, ye alſo ſhall continue in the Son, and in the Father.

25 And this is the promiſe that he hath promiſed us, even eternal life.

26 Theſe things have I written unto you, concerning them that ſeduce you.

27 But the anointing which ye have received of him, abideth in you: and ye need not that any man teach you: But, as the ſame anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lye: and even as it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him.

28 And now, little children, abide in him; that when he ſhall appear, we may have confidence, and not be aſhamed before him at his coming.

29 If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doth righteouſneſs, is born of him.

CHAP. III.

He declareth the ſingular love of God towards us, in making us his ſons. 3 Who therefore ought obediently to keep his commandments, 11 As alſo brotherly to love one another.

BEhold, what manner of love the Father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, becauſe it knew him not.

2 Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be: but we know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is.

3 And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himſelf, even as he is pure.

4 Whoſoever committeth ſin tranſgreſſeth alſo the law: for ſin is the tranſgreſſion of the law.

5 And ye know that he was manifeſted to take away our ſins; and in him is no ſin.

6 Whoſoever abideth in him, ſinneth not: whoſoever ſinneth, hath not ſeen him, neither known him.

7 Little children, let no man deceive you: He that doeth righteouſneſs, is righteous, even as he is righteous.

8 He that committeth ſin, is of the devil; for the devil ſinneth from the beginning. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the devil.

9 Whoſoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him: and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God.

10 In this the children of God are manifeſt, and the children of the devil: Whoſoever ſoever doeth not righteouſneſs, is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

11 For this is the meſſage that ye heard from the beginning, that we ſhould love one another.

12 Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and ſlew his brother: And wherefore ſlew he him? Becauſe his own works were evil, and his brothers righteous.

13 Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.

14 We know that we have paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren: he that loveth not his brother, abideth in death.

15 Whoſoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

16 Hereby perceive we the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

17 But whoſo hath this worlds good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

18 My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth.

19 And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and ſhall aſſure our hearts before him.

20 For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

21 Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God.

22 And whatſoever we aſk, we receive of him, becauſe we keep his commandments, and do thoſe things that are pleaſing in his ſight.

23 And this is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

24 And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him: and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

Ver. 8. —— For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the devil.] By the Devil's works is in the general meant all ſin and vice, (as is evident from the foregoing verſe, he that committeth ſin is of the devil) yet I conceive there is ſomething more particular intended here by theſe words. Some particular works are to be underſtood, wherein the power, ſubtilty, or malice of that evil ſpirit are more ſignally exerted, and therefore are emphatically here called the works of the devil. And this is that which I now deſign to offer; and I will be the larger in inſiſting on it, becauſe it is of very great moment, and likewiſe becauſe I ſee this is not taken notice of by commentators.

Firſt, Superſtition is a remarkable work of the Devil, and without doubt is meant here. This is a reverencing and adoring at a venture, as thoſe Religioniſts at Athens did, who erected an altar to an unknown God: It is a yielding of unreaſonable and groundleſs homage, and (to define it more generally) it is attributing in a religious way, more than is due to things or perſons. It is in this large ſenſe, a vain and groundleſs fear where no fear (i. e. no true cauſe of fear) is. And on the other hand, it is a fond and unwarrantable expectation of thoſe things from created Beings which they cannot afford us, and which they were never deſigned for. The evil ſpirit took care to employ the minds of Pagans about theſe matters, that he might thereby divert them from objects of a better nature, and take off their thoughts from true religion, and the Divine Author of it, and that he might hold them in a conſtant dependance on himſelf, whilſt he perſwaded them that theſe fooliſh fears and hopes ſhould be of ſingular uſe and advantage to them. Hence of old they had their lucky and unlucky days, on which they made ſuperſtitious and fond remarks. The obſerver of times mentioned by Moſes, Deut. xviii. 10. and joined with him that uſeth divination was, I conceive, of this ſort: His proper talent was to tell what days were fortunate and what unfortunate, what events ſhould happen on ſuch ſeaſons, and what on others, and which of them ſhould be ſucceſsful. And thus R. David Kimchi underſtands the place. The perſons of old had this notion of the diſtinction of days, as appears from their caſting lot from day to day, and from month to month, (Eſth. iii. 7) when the deſign was on foot of maſſacring the Jews. They were ſollicitous to enquire what lucky days and months of the year would happen to favour that bloody conſpiracy. From thoſe firſt ages of the world, this ſuperſtitious practice was derived to the Greeks and Romans; the former of whom (as Heſiod, Pythagoras, and others acquaint us) were very great obſervers of days, critically dividing them into good and bad ones, and calling one kind of them mothers, and the other ſtep-dames. Hence we have Heſiod's days, which he ſtiles ſo, becauſe he treats there of the difference of days, ſome whereof are good, others bad, and a third ſort of a middle nature, And the latter (i. e. the Romans) out-did the Grecians in this vain obſervation of days, marking the lucky ones (as they took them to be) with white characters, and the unlucky ones with black, to ſignify the different nature of them. They grew at laſt ſo obſervant of theſe diſtinct times, that (as Macrobius and others relate) they dared not keep court, or engage in battle, or ſo much as invite their friends to ſupper, or do any thing elſe in the courſe of their lives, upon thoſe times which they had fondly marked out as unfortunate.

To this were added many other ſuperſtitious uſages, as ariolation, omens, auguries, and a vaſt number of other kinds of ſoothſayings and divinations. A very remarkable and ancient inſtance we have of theſe in King Nebuchadnezzar, who when he would be determined to go againſt the Jews or the Ammonites, and be proſperous in either expedition, betook himſelf to the known and uſual practice of divination, (for they generally uſed before the wars to divine about the manner of it: They writ down the names of the countries or cities which they deſigned to invade and make war againſt; and according as the divination directed them, they fell upon ſuch a particular place): The king of Babylon ſtood at the parting of the way, at the head of two ways to uſe divination: He made his arrows bright, he conſulted with images, he looked in the liver; ſee Ezek. xxi. 21. Where we ſee that (according to what we read in prophane authors, who ſpeak of the manner of divination and inchantment) he is careful of that circumſtance ſo much obſerved by that ſort of men, viz. to chuſe a place where two or three ways meet, and there to go about their buſineſs, for they thought this was very advantageous to their deſigns. Having thus made choice of a convenient poſt, he falls to the work of divining, and that he may be ſure to ſpeed well, he uſes three ſorts of divination, that by one of them at leaſt (if the other two ſhould fail) he might arrive to the foreknowledge of the future occurrence he was prying into. Firſt, he made his arrows bright:

From whence ſome would gather, that the Chaldean kings had a way of exerciſing their magic skill upon their weapons before they went out to battle, to give them edge and force when they come to fight. But this is a groſs miſtake, becauſe this place in Ezekiel repreſents only the Chaldeans way of divining, and therefore the arrows are not mentioned here with any reſpect to the battle, but only they are uſed in order to divination: Which was thus, according to Jerom on the place; they put ſeveral arrows into a quiver written with the names of thoſe things which they conſulted about, and that arrow which was taken out firſt, was the lot; and they determined by this which city to beſiege or invade. Which comes near the divination in uſe among the Romans, by certain letters, and by rods, Liv. lib. 1. But I rather think that the Chaldee Verſion affords us a better interpretation, which renders that clauſe thus, jacet ſagittas, he caſts, he throws, he ſhoots his arrows up into the air, (where they are ſeen bright and glittering, and therefore are ſaid to be made bright, which the other account, given by Jerom, takes no notice of) to ſee which way they would fall, and thence to know which way to lead his army. This I take to be the βελεμαντεία uſed by Nebuchadnezzar before he went out to war: He ſtood in bivio, at the parting of the two ways, (as was the cuſtom of diviners) intently obſerving towards which of them the arrows fell, that he might know thereby whether the Ammonites or the Jews were to be fought with good ſucceſs. This was the very ſame mode of divination which was uſed by the Greeks and Romans, this was the very ῥαβδομαντεία, the divining by a rod or ſtaff, ſo frequent of old, for ῥάβδος is a large word and ſign; a rod of iron or ſteel, or wood, or any ſuch ſlender thing like a wand, or ſtaff, or arrow. The Jews (who at one time or other imitated all the Pagan follies in the world) took up this ſoothſaying, Their ſtaff declared unto them, Hoſ. iv. 12. i. e. they made uſe of this rhabdomancy which was ſo frequent among the Pagans, and thereby they prognoſticated concerning things to come. The Arabians of old (as Chriſtopherus a Caſtro tells us) conſulted their gods by arrows or ſtaves: and (if I may be permitted to offer my conjecture) this practice among them and others was borrowed, either from the Egyptian magicians rods, Exod. vii. 12. or from the rods mentioned Numb. xvii. where the Iſraelites were commanded to write the names of the princes of their tribes.

Secondly, He conſulted with images, or (as 'tis in the Hebrew) with teraphim, ſo often ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament, which are no other than images for divination, to foretel future events. Theſe were a ſort of magical images (for you muſt know that divination (of which I am now ſpeaking) and magic (of which afterwards) generally went together) uſed by the Gentiles; the Egyptians and Arabians eſpecially, called by theſe latter Taliſman, made at a certain time when they knew ſuch ſtars and conſtellations were moſt active; ſee Selden de Dis Syr. 1 Syntag. The diabolick ſpirits entred at ſuch a time into theſe, images, theſe teraphims, and poſſeſſed them as they uſed to take poſſeſſion of human bodies, and by them and in them they ſpoke, and moved and acted, and did ſtrange feats, and gave anſwers to thoſe that enquired of them, ſo that they may be ſaid to be the Devil's oracles. Theſe images were very early in the world, if we may credit the Jewiſh writers, Zoar, &c, who tell us, that they were uſed by the profligate ſinners that lived about the time of the flood, and afterwards by the Babel-builders. But this we are ſure of, that theſe magical inſtruments were made uſe of by the king of Babylon, and that they were conſulted by him in the way of divination, under which notion I have conſidered them at preſent.

Thirdly, He looked into the liver, or the heart, (for the word cabed ſignifies both) and thence this ſort of augur is ſtiled roeh baccabed by the Jewiſh Maſters, an inſpector into thoſe parts of animals: Whereby we are to underſtand that common kind of divination uſed by all the Pagans, eſpecially the Romans, (who perhaps had it from the Chaldeans) viz. the looking into the entrails of beaſts that were to be ſacrificed, and from that critical inſpection, gueſſing at what ſhould come to paſs.

Theſe were the three ſorts of divination which Nebuchadnezzar applied himſelf to upon ſo great an emergency; and beſides theſe, there was an incredible number more which the Pagan nations (i. e. almoſt all the world) addicted themſelves to. But indeed

The divination by the fowls of the air was of the greateſt account, for it was believed by the vulgar, that theſe were well acquainted with the gods, and knew their minds better than other creatures, by reaſon of their greater nearneſs to them; ſee Ovid. Faſt. l 5. I will produce ſome particular inſtances of this their ſuperſtition, which conſiſted in auguries and auſpicies, i. e. (taking thoſe words ſtrictly) divining by birds, foretelling by the flying, or ſitting, or feeding, or by the voices of theſe creatures, things that ſhould happen afterwards. Thus Calchas from the number of ſparrows which he ſaw, foretold how many years the Trojan war was to laſt. The ſwallows that were ſeen by Darius, when he was in his expedition againſt the Scythians, were looked upon as an unlucky auſpice, and preſaged his death. Alexander the Great was aſſured by his augur, of a victory before the battle, from the flight of an eagle. Vectius (a famous augur) from the vultures that appeared to Romulus, gathered, that the Roman empire ſhould laſt twelve hundred years; Varro Ennius. The crowing of cocks was auſpicious, and preſaged victory to the Boetii againſt the Lacedemonians; Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 21. So likewiſe Themiſtocles's army were aſſured of conqueſt by the fortunate crowing of thoſe animals. But the fighting of cocks, it ſeems, were an ill omen, and foretold ſeditions and civil wars, Artemidor. l. 3. c. 5. The bees that were ſeen on the altar before the fight at Pharſalia, were reckoned unfortunate, and portended Pompey's fatal overthrow. Several other ſigns and omens, good and bad (as they accounted them, and verily believed them to be) were frequent among the heathens, and they were ſtrangely affrighted or encouraged by them, both in their journeys, and at home. Auguſtus Cæſar was a great obſerver of theſe, as a credible author, Suetonius in Octavio, cap. 92. and cap. 96. informs us, and therefore I will mention one pretty paſſage that concerns him: When he was upon his march to Actium, and prepared to engage the enemy, there met him an aſs with the owner of it: The name of the former (for it ſeems aſſes had their names then) was Nicon, which ſignifies a conqueror; and the latter's name was Eutychus, the import of which was fortunate. Hereupon the emperor took the omen to be good, and promiſed himſelf victory; and after the victory he called the place Nicopolis; and the image of an aſs was ſet up in the temple there, in remembrance of the happy omen.

I might add that ſneezing was accounted a ſacred ſign, and was called ſo by ſome of the beſt Pagan writers, and that it was held one of the greateſt omens (either for good or evil, according to its circumſtances) by the generality of the deluded world; ſee Hom. Odyſſ. 6. Ariſtot. de. Hiſt. Nat. Plutarch. vit. Homeri. Thus forſooth ſneezing in the morning was held unlucky, but at noon or afterwards it was thought to be of another nature; ſee Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 28. c. 2. If it was heard from the left hand, it was doomed unfortunate, but not ſo on the right: Wherefore from this latter it was that Themiſtocles and Xenophon, two great warriors, took their omen of ſucceſs; the one was encouraged by it to fight the enemy; Plut. in vita Themiſtocl. the other was choſen commander of the army by it; Xenoph. Hiſt. l. 6.

To ſpeak more generally, viz. of the whole ſet of Pagan divinations and auguries, they were looked upon as certain and undoubted prognoſticks of future occurrences. Whenever they buſied themſelves about the flight, and chattering, and the pecking of birds, and made enquiry into the entrails of ſlain beaſts, or uſed any other way of divining, they were ſo beſotted as to think, that they could thence infallibly foretell futurities. To which purpoſe there was a particular office and college of augurs, who (though their name be from one ſpecies only) were ſkilful in the whole art of divination, and interpreted all the ſigns of the Gods, as they called them. So great reverence was paid to this art, that nothing was done at home or abroad without it; Liv. lib. 6. c. 41. And,

From the whole we may obſerve, (which is the thing deſigned by me in muſtering up theſe Pagan follies) that Satan bore a great ſway in the minds of men, and deluded them after a ſtrange manner, to that purpoſe making uſe of all ſorts of creatures (as well as the ſerpent of old) to deceive mankind. It is evident, that whilſt the minds of the Gentiles were detained and buſied with theſe groſs vanities, a habit of ſuperſtition was contracted, the great diſpoſer and over-ruler of all occurrences and events was forgotten, Divine Providence was baniſhed out of the world, groundleſs fears and jealouſies were created, and all the true and ſound principles of religion were deſtroyed. Whence,

It is reaſonable to conclude, that the helliſh dæmons had a hand in all this, and that from them theſe auguries had their original, (as Auguſtin, de Doct. Chriſtian. l. 2. long ſince determined) and, in a word, that theſe were the noted and ſignal works of the Devil. He took care to have theſe ſpread over the whole world, that his dominion and power might be thereby enlarged. Every where it was the cuſtom to conſult the gods, as they called it, i. e. in plainer and truer terms, to enquire of the Devil, by applying themſelves to the arts of divination and ſoothſaying.

Yet we may take notice of this alſo, that the moſt noble ſpirits, though not enlightened with Chriſtianity, ſlighted theſe things, and looked upon them as deluſions. Thus we read how the gallant Hector anſwered Polydamas, who was inclined to put off the battle, becauſe of ſome ill omen he had received from the augurs; he plainly told him, That the only beſt augury, and that which was of Divine Authority, was to fight valiantly for his country; Hom. Il. μ. It was a memorable ſpeech of M. Varro, a moſt wiſe Roman, who, perceiving the errors and forgeries of the augurs divinations, from their inſpection into the entrails of beaſts, freely ſaid upon this occaſion, That the gods were both idle and ſordid, in lapping up their counſels in the unſavory bowels of brutes, to be raked out thence by the mad prieſts. Euſebius relates out of Hecatæus, an old Greek Hiſtorian, that when one Moſſolanus, (or as others, Myſonianus) a great and notable captain under Alexander the Great, and eminent for his ſkill in diſcharging the warlike bow, advanced with his army near the Red Sea; a ſooth ſayer bid him ſtop, and make a halt: Whereupon the captain made bold to aſk him, What was the matter? and why they were not ſuffered to march? The officious augur preſently pointed at a bird on the way, and told them, It was neceſſary to conſult that animal, and to ſee which way it would fly, that ſo they might follow her flight by marching that way; or if ſhe flew back, that they might return too. The warrior being thus hindred on his march by the augur's trifling ſtay, to divine about the ſucceſs of the war by that fowl that ſat on the way, ſilently drew his bow, and ſhot it dead upon the ſpot; and when he had done ſo, he uttered ſuch words as theſe, How was it poſſible that ſilly creature could read us our fortune, when (you ſee) ſhe could not foretell her own? How could that animal which foreſaw nothing of the arrow, foretel us any thing of our journey? If ſhe had known futurities, ſhe had not come in the way to be killed by Myſonianus. And ſo he marched on, and we do not read that he was ever the leſs ſucceſsful for this attempt. The ſentiment of Cato in this matter is well known. It was a wonder to him if one ſoothſayer did not fall laughing, when he ſaw another, they being all of them ſuch a cheating tribe, and deſigning purpoſely to abuſe the people. Cicero, who was an augur himſelf, and one of the chief of that worſhipful college, ſometimes ſeriouſly confutes the follies of theſe divinations, and at other times makes himſelf merry with them, and laughs at thoſe fond men who direct their lives by the chattering of a crow, by the entrails of a ſheep, by oracles, by dreams, by lots, and by fantaſtick prodigies: This is the taſk of that great wit, in his ſecond book of divination. Thus among the wiſeſt men, the folly of ſoothſaying was deſpiſed and rejected, and the augurs themſelves were looked upon no other than impoſtors; and many of the other Pagan ſuperſtitions began to be diſeſteemed and laid aſide.

Now, if this was done by thoſe that made free uſe of their reaſons and judgments, it is no wonder that it was backed by the author of the Chriſtian religion, whoſe deſign it was to rectify and improve thoſe faculties. And it is moſt certain that the principles and maxims of Chriſtianity do eminently overthrow the fond ſurmiſes and frightful obſervations of ſuperſtitious men. Nothing indeed could do it ſo effectually as the Goſpel: For now under the Evangelical œconomy and Chriſtian diſpenſation, our adoration is confined and determined, and we know whom we worſhip; and therefore the Δεισιδαιμονία of the Gentiles can have no footing here. And as for the dread of future occurrences, Chriſtianity hath utterly removed it by the right apprehenſions of things which it bleſſeth us with, and by teaching us to place religion in that which is truly religion. It effectually extirpates all ſuperſtition, by ſtifling the principles of enthuſiaſm and fanaticiſm, by ſuppreſſing falſe fears, and childiſh and groundleſs terrors, by ſuperceding all fantaſtick devotion, by putting an end to all fooliſh rites and idle ceremonies, all ſuperfluous and needleſs obſervances, which proceed from a cauſleſs timorouſneſs in religion, and from falſe repreſentations of God and his worſhip. All this we owe to the truth and doctrine revealed by Jeſus Chriſt: For though conſiderable diſcoveries were made by ſome wiſe and ſerious perſons among the Heathens, as well as Jews, yet this was nothing in compariſon of what followed, when the laws of Chriſt prevailed in the world.

Secondly, It is reaſonable to underſtand by the works of the devil, the Pagan oracles which were ſo fam us of old at Delphos, and in other parts of Greece, as he Trophonian oracles at Thebes and Lebadia, both in Bœotia; and thoſe other more remote ones in Lybia and Egypt, and other countries, where were theſe habitations of the devils, thoſe dens of Satan, who loved to be enquired of and courted by the ignorant and beſotted Pagans. I know there are ſome who think there was nothing of the diabolical ſpirit in theſe oracles, but that they were only for gain. I deny not but there was intereſt in the caſe, yea, double intereſt, that of the devil, as well as the other of the prieſts. I grant that oracles were a juggle, but a deviliſh one; for it muſt be acknowledged that there were ſometimes ſuch things foretold by them as could not poſſibly be foreſeen and known by human ſkill. But the knowledge and ſagacity of the evil angels might reach them; becauſe theſe inviſible and active ſpirits can fly up and down the world with infinite ſwiftneſs, and inform themſelves of all occurrences whatſoever, and are preſent at the moſt private conſults, and have learned, by long experience and obſervation, to dive into the deſigns of men, and to ſee the very diſpoſition and tendency of cauſes before they begin to act: Beſides that, they are always caballing together, and holding correſpondence with one another, ſo that it is probable what one of them knows, the whole herd of them is acquainted with, and that in a few moments time.

Hence it is, That the oracles ſpoke ſuch ſhrewd things ſometimes, which it is impoſſible to give an account of, unleſs we aſſert that this office was ſet up and maintained by thoſe inviſible demons; for it is certain, that the moſt cunning and ſubtileſt prieſt of them all could never have foretold thoſe things.

Again, there is ground to believe that theſe ill ſpirits were managers here, becauſe we are aſcertained from thoſe who deſcribe the manner and circumſtances of the delivery of the oracles, that there was ſomething more than man in it. The place was filled with amazing noiſe and horror, loud ſhrieks and howlings were heard, and ſometimes the temples were torn with thunder-claps; the earth trembled and quaked, and ſo did the prieſts; theſe now appeared with erected hair, with diſtorted eyes, with foaming mouths, and unuſual but frightful voices; they beat and knocked their breaſts with an inhuman fury; they raged and raved, and ran about like poſſeſſed perſons, as indeed they were. The ſubterraneous demons, whom they conſulted and dealt with, put both the earth and their bodies into this motion and diſorder. This looks like the trueſt cauſe of them, and therefore we have good reaſon to aſſert, that thoſe Pagan prieſts were acted by thoſe evil ſpirits, who generally brought them their intelligence, and helped them to give anſwers. And this was done (if I may be permitted to offer my conjecture) in imitation of the celebrated oracle of Urim and Thummim, and of the Divine Inſpirations and true Prophetick ſpirit which the Holy Scripture ſpeaks of; for it is certain that the infernal ſpirits did in many particular emulate the things and practices which were in uſe among the people of God the Jews, and which are recorded in the Sacred Writings.

From what hath been ſaid, we may with confidence as well as reaſon aver, that they are no ſuperſtitious Chriſtians, who think the Pagan oracles were from the devil: For we find apparent marks and ſigns of his acting in them, we ſee thoſe things done which we cannot impute to any other cauſe, and therefore, here is no reaſon to cry out of ſuperſtition.

Thus it appears that the deſign of the Pagan oracles, was not wholly for the intereſt of their prieſts, but that the Devil got much more by them than they. I ſee reaſon therefore to ſubſcribe to Lactantius, and other pious fathers, who expreſly tell us, that they were the invention of Satan. And indeed this was not only the belief of Chriſtians, but of Pagans themſelves. Porphyrius, de dæmonibus, (who was a very inquiſitive man, and had diligently ſearched into the nature of the oracles) ingenuouſly confeſſes, that the demons were the authors of them. And the ſame is acknowledged by Iamblicus, de myſteriis, cap. 21.

Having thus made it evident that the Pagan oracles were the works of the devil, (which it was neceſſary for me to undertake in the firſt place under this head) I proceed now to prove that our Saviour deſtroyed thoſe impious works. This he effectually did, by curbing and leſſening the power of this infernal ſpirit, by detecting his cheats and forgeries, by ſilencing his prieſts, and by ſtriking the devil himſelf dumb. It is true, even before Chriſt's birth, the hiſtories of thoſe times tell us, that the oracular ſpirits did not make anſwer, but began to faulter, and could not play their accuſtomed pranks. The oracles did not preſently ceaſe juſt at our Saviour's coming; for that they did decay before that time, is plain from thoſe words of Tully; What is the meaning of the ceſſation of the Delphick oracles, not only in our time, but a good while ago, inſomuch that nothing is more contemptible now than they are? Neither is it denied that even after Chriſt's death ſome oracles were enquired of, and returned anſwers, if Suetonius in the life of Caligula may be credited. And Plutarch ſpeaking of the ceaſing of oracles in Greece, excepteth that of Lebadia. And other hiſtories, I know, mention ſome kind of oracling in force till Julian's time. But it is undeniable, that about the time of Chriſt's arrival in the world, and when he was arrived, and ſoon after upon the preaching of the Goſpel, moſt of the Heathen oracles were ſtruck ſpeechleſs, and delivered no anſwers to thoſe that came to enquire of them. This is teſtified by Lucan who lived in Nero's time; and by Juvenal who flouriſhed in Domitian's reign. Theſe, and other writers complain, that Apollo's oracles were ceaſed, and would tell them their fortunes no more; that the demons were all packed away; that the forlorn ſpirits had quitted their beloved territories, and with horrid groans reſigned up their former manſions. And,

This is it which was foretold by one of the Sibyls in her myſtick verſes, that a little child, even the Bleſſed Babe Jeſus, ſhould throw down idolatry with his hand, and ſtop the mouths of the Delphick devils. And here by the way I appeal to you, whether it was not a wonderful forerunner and preſage of what ſhould afterward be effected by Chriſt in this matter, that one of the Sibyls was of Delphos, and propheſied concerning our Saviour there, in the city where the oracle of Apollo was, whence ſhe bears the name of the Delphick Sibyl, becauſe ſhe had her chief ſeat at Delphos, and there delivered her oracles ſeveral years before the Trojan wars. This was a happy prognoſtick of the bleſſed change which was to be made, i. e. that Chriſt Jeſus ſhould be preached, and the propheſies concerning him and the Goſpel be fulfilled, in thoſe very places where Paganiſm and idolatry ſo mightily prevailed. But we need not fly to the poets:

It is evident from other writers, that upon Chriſt's maniſeſting himſelf to the world, yea, ſometime before he actually appeared, the oracles were generally ſuppreſſed and quaſhed. I will mention only Plutarch, a grave hiſtorian and philoſopher, who lived in Trajan's reign, and writ two treatiſes, wherein he poſitively atteſts the ceſſation of the oracles in thoſe days, and purpoſely ſearcheth into the cauſes of it: What a ſtrange account doth he give there of it? You will find that he is hard put to it, and utters many ridiculous and abſurd things. But he is to be excuſed, becauſe he could give no other, he being ſo unhappy as not to own the author of Chriſtianity, who was the cauſe of this and greater wonders in that age. This writer will have the ceſſation of oracles to be the effect of natural cauſes; much after the rate of Tully in his book of divination, who imputes it to the earth become old, ſo that the fatidick virtue was worn out through length of time; As we ſee, ſaith he, many rivers are dried up and turned into another courſe for the ſame cauſe. Juſt ſo Plutarch philoſophizeth; the oracles, ſaith he, depended upon the nature of the ſoil, that is, a particular ſort of ground in thoſe parts, ſent up a particular ſort of vapours and exhalations, which with their ſteam affected the prieſts brains and ſpirits, and ſo moved them to propheſy, and made them capable of giving anſwers concerning future events, to thoſe that came to conſult them: But after a long time, this peculiar quality and temperament of the earth vaniſhed, and could not any longer ſupply the prieſts with ſuch a ſort of vapours as would cauſe predictions; and ſo farewel oracles. A very goodly account, you'll ſay, eſpecially from one of great learning. This is vain philoſophy indeed. But that which I alledge this writer for is this, that you may be ſatisfied from him of the matter of fact, and be throughly convinced that things did really happen according to our Saviour's deſign, and that theſe works of the devil were deſtroyed. Accordingly therefore this author tells us, that in his time the oracles generally were caſhiered. Thoſe that would be farther ſatisfied in this matter, may conſult Euſebius, who hath fully treated of this theme, in (Præp. Evang. l. 4, 5) ſhewing not only the vanity and falſhood of the oracles, but particularly relating how they ceaſed at Chriſt's coming; this being ſo largely handled by him, I remit the reader thither.

And now I might obſerve concerning theſe oracles, as I did before of the ſuperſtitious divinations, that many of the braveſt and wiſeſt Heathens cared not for them, but manifeſtly ſlighted and jeered them, as Demoſthenes could ſay the Delphick oracle did φιλιϖϖίζειν, had learned to favour Philip king of Macedon, Plutarch. de Herodoto. that is as much as to ſay, they were arrant cheats, (for the devil could cheat and flatter as well as the prieſts) they could be corrupted with gold, and take what part they pleaſed. The people began at laſt to ſee through theſe impoſtures, and conſequently their regard to them was conſiderably abated. They arrived to this notion, (which Minutius Felix inſiſts upon) that the obſervers of theſe oracles were not ſucceſsful, and the deſpiſers of them proſpered. They found out at length the reaſon why Apollo gave ſuch dark and ambiguous anſwers, why they were delivered by the prieſts mutteringly and with a low voice, ſo as not to be perfectly heard, namely, becauſe by this means they could beſt ſalve their cheating, and the enquirers ſhould not be able to know whether they ſpoke truth or falſhood. For theſe reaſons Apollo was ſirnamed Λοξίω, becauſe he oftentimes put them off with oblique and doubtful reſponſes: For the devil in theſe oracles of old profeſſedly equivocated, and played the Jeſuit betimes. I could ſet before you what the brave Cato thought of theſe oracles, as he is repreſented in Lucan. I might tranſcribe a great part of Tully's ſecond book of divination, which diſcovers the vanities of theſe reſponſes, and proves them to be mere gulls. But you know my buſineſs at preſent is to evince, (and I hope I have done it ſufficiently) that theſe lying oracles were confuted at laſt by a greater than Cato or Tully, even Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. It is a known, but remarkable paſſage in Plutarch, that the demons complained aloud that their great god Pan was dead: That was the lamentable voice which was heard in the Grecian ſea in Tiberius's reign, when our Saviour was crucified. Then Chriſt through death deſtroyed him who had the power of death, the devil; then the prince of this world was judged; then our Saviour, having ſpoiled principalities and powers on the croſs, triumphed over them in it. No wonder then that the curſed demons howled and lamented, when they ſaw their kingdom was ſhaken, and began to fail; when they experimentally found that he who cried with a loud voice on the croſs, had drowned the noiſe of their juggling oracles. And in a ſhort time, as other writers will inform us, this diabolical trade was clearly put down in the moſt conſiderable countries of the world, which we muſt attribute to the ſole power and ſoveraignty of that Jeſus who came to deſtroy the works of the devil.

Thirdly, I underſtand by theſe works the diabolical obſeſſions of mens bodies, which our Saviour did actually defeat and deſtroy, when he ejected the evil ſpirits out of thoſe poor wretches, who were thus poſſeſſed by them. It is evident that at the time when Chriſt was on earth, great numbers of perſons laboured under this grievous calamity, and we do not read that at any other ſeaſon ſuch numerous legions of them moleſted mankind. But the Evangeliſts acquaint us, that our Lord did frequently reſcue the bodies of the poſſeſſed from the power and dominion of thoſe foul fiends.

As for the reaſons why ſuch vaſt numbers of men were thus viſited when our Saviour was on earth, theſe may juſtly be aſſigned; it was an age much given to magick and enchantments, and the calling up of ſpirits was a frequent thing in thoſe days: Beſides, Divine Providence might ſo order it at that very juncture of time for an occaſion of the more glorious cures. It might happen by the particular diſpoſal of the Almighty, that thereby it might appear to the world, that Chriſt had power over the devils, and could, when he pleaſed, diſlodge thoſe miſchievous ſpirits, and reſcue mankind from their tortures. The reality and greatneſs of his ſovereignty over thoſe infernal powers, were to be demonſtrated by thoſe archievements. Moreover, it may rationally be thought that the devils would be moſt buſy then when Chriſt came into the world, and would be more intereſted to diſturb and torment mankind, becauſe they ſaw their kingdom was going down, and Chriſtianity was to be exalted in the world.

Now therefore it was time for the Meſſias to exert his miraculous power; and behold, as an effect of it, the devils ſubmitted to him, and at his command preſently quitted the bodies which they had taken poſſeſſion of. One perſon among the reſt was a famous inſtance of this ſort, out of whom a legion of devils was ejected by Chriſt's holy exorciſm: With one word he vanquiſhed whole regiments of the kingdom of darkneſs; he routed armies of infernal dæmons. I remit you to the Evangelical records, where you have abundant proof of the caſting out of theſe helliſh ſpirits, not only by our Saviour himſelf, but by his Diſciples, who (as you read) came to him with theſe words in their mouths, Lord, the devils are ſubject to us; Luke x. 17. this being an effect of that mighty power which Chriſt had inveſted his followers with; Luke ix. 1. And therefore Origen, Contr. Celſ. l. 3. rationally infers, that Chriſt's power was Divine, becauſe at his Name the devils left the bodies of the ἐνεργȣμένοι.

Fourthly, Is there not reaſon to think that John refers here to what Chriſt did, when by his coming he rooted out magick and ſorcery, dealing with the Devil, either by practiſing witchcraft, or conſulting with thoſe that did, and the like works of the black art, which the curſed ſpirit taught the world? Theſe were the Devil's opera which he ſhewed of old and got ſo much by, whereby he pleas'd and gratified, and at the ſame time bubbled the eaſily deluded people. Not to attend to the perverſe folly of thoſe mere matter-men who diſown ſpirits, and conſequently deny a God as well as devils, for they will rather profeſs Atheiſm, than acknowledge any ſuch rank of beings. Not to gratify theſe groſs Atheiſts ſo far as to take notice in this place of what they are wont to ſay in defence of their mad opinion; I ſhall take it for granted, that magical operations, properly ſo called, are the works of the Devil, and that he was the firſt founder of them, deſigning and endeavouring thereby to bring men under his dominion, and (ſo far as he can effect it in the minds of men) to exclude God and his Providence out of the world. This queſtionleſs was his deſign, and was never doubted by the ancient Chriſtians, as appears not only from Arnobius, Adv. Gentes; but ſeveral other primitive writers, though ſome of late ſo extraordinarily civil to him, that they will not impute the practice of magick to his aſſiſtance. Good men! They are afraid to ſlander the Devil. But from the hiſtory of ſeveral ages, we are certainly informed that there was nothing more uſual than to make a compact with Satan; which the magicians and wizards effected with many direful ceremonies. And when there was not a formal league with the Devil, yet there was a communication with him, becauſe the perſons gave themſelves into his hands by their immoderate curioſity, by their affecting to know more than was fitting, or by an impatient coveting after wealth and riches, or by a greedy deſire of having an ability and opportunity to ſatisfy their revenge. From that infallible and inſpired teſtimony in Deut. xviii. 10, 11. we are aſſured that there were enchanters, witches, charmers, conſulters with familiar ſpirits, wizards and necromancers: For theſe perſons, and their practices, would not have been condemned and pronounced an abomination, (as they are there) unleſs there had been really ſuch.

This I think is very plain and unanſwerable. And truly I am apt to believe, that the Holy Ghoſt makes uſe of ſo many different words here, on purpoſe to obviate and refute the vain cavils of the men of our days, who are Infidels as to the point of witchcraft, and with great confidence tell us, that there is no ſuch thing, and that the foundation of it, viz. a compact with evil ſpirits, is a mere forgery. Here are ſix words to preſs and inculcate the ſame thing, that we may be thereby convinced of the truth and reality of the thing, viz. that there were and are enchanters, witches, &c. perſons holding correſpondence with infernal agents, and by their help and aſſiſtance effecting ſtrange things in the world. The laſt in Moſes's catalogue, are necromancers, ſuch who by magick inchantment raiſed the ſouls of the dead, or the Devil rather to repreſent thoſe ſouls, and then conſulted with him, and enquired concerning ſome future events which they were exceeding deſirous to know. Of this we have an ancient and famous inſtance in the Sacred Records, viz. the witch of Endor, who by this deviliſh art cauſed the appearance of Samuel, i. e. of ſome evil ſpirit in his ſhape. And of theſe helliſh necromancers, perhaps that of Job, (ch. iii. 8.) is to be underſtood, they curſe the day, (for the night is the time proper for their black work) and raiſe up leviathan, i. e. the Devil, who moſt fitly is compared to the leviathan. Or, in a more literal ſenſe, to raiſe up the leviathan, may ſignify, to charm and tame that ſea-monſter, and ſo it ſets forth the great, but deviliſh power of magick and incantation. As Plutarch ſaith of the Egyptian prieſts, that by art magick they could tame the crocodile, ſo as to make him come to their hand. This necromantick practice is ſpoken of in Iſa. viii. 19. and is called, Seeking unto them that have familiar ſpirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter. To which is added, a reprehenſion with a direction; Should not a people ſeek unto their God? Yes ſurely; for the living to the dead ſhould they go? No certainly, that is abominable and execrable. And I queſtion not but the idolatrous Jews, who uſed necromancy, are meant by thoſe who remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, Iſa. lxv. 4. This, and the other parts of this ſcience, were very frequent in the world heretofore; eſpecially they made uſe of it to enquire before-hand what ſucceſs they ſhould have in their affairs: And thus the practice of divination and magick was often co-incident. But their charms and ſpells, and myſtical characters, were the moſt frequent of all, whereby they helped and eaſed people in caſe of ſickneſs, bodily pains, luxation of members, and all outward calamities that befel them: Whereby alſo they were able to inflict diſeaſes, and all manner of bodily evils, and (in brief) to produce very ſurpriſing and aſtoniſhing operations; ſee Cato de re ruſtic. cap. 160. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 28. c. 2.

I am very ready to grant, notwithſtanding what I have ſaid, that many things have been aſcribed to the Devil which he was never guilty of, or was any ways concerned in. I queſtion not but many things have paſſed for magick of the worſt ſort with vulgar and unthinking people, which were the mere effects of natural philoſophy improved and ſet forth by art. The times have been ſuch, that a mathematician and a magician have been eſteemed the ſame. But though we pity the miſtakes of the ignorant, yet we are not to attend to the dictates of the perverſe, who avouch there is no diabolick magick, and therein deſtroy the faith of all hiſtory, both divine and humane.

The ancient great maſters in this impious art and practice, who are mentioned in the Sacred Story, were the Egyptian ſorcerers, (of whom Jannes and Jambres were the chief, and accordingly they are called in the Talmud, the princes of the magicians) Gen. xli. 8. 2 Tim. iii. 8. Balaam the Meſopotamian ſoothſayer, Numb. xxii. 5. the Caſdim or Chaldean magi, Dan. ii. 2. And the ancient practiſers in this art mentioned in prophane writers, were Zabulus, Zamolxis, Abbaris, Zoroaſter, Paſetes, Pancrates and Zachlas, (both of them Egyptian magicians, ſpoken of by Lucian and Apuleius) Numa Pompilius, &c. Pythagoras may be taken into the number, for from ſeveral circumſtances of his life (as well as from the precept, to worſhip the infernal gods) he may be thought to be a magician: And perhaps in his travels into Egypt and Chaldea, he pick'd up this ill art; for 'tis certain that from theſe countries the magical practices had their riſe. Yea, many of the Jews, the chief men eſpecially, were given to magick; and even the elders of the Sanhedrim ſtudied this art, ſaith our learned Lightfoot; Hor. Hebr. in Mat. xxiv. 24. And he farther obſerves, that the nearer the Jewiſh ſtate approached to its ruin, the more were they addicted to it.

Fifthly, By the works of the Devil, we muſt needs underſtand idolatry and polytheiſm; than which there was nothing more ſerviceable towards the promoting his kingdom in the world.

It is evident that they are properly the Devil's works, and carry his mark upon them: Particularly as to idolatry or polytheiſm, it is plain that it is of his ſetting up. Ye ſhall be as gods, was the early inſinuation and ſuggeſtion of that evil ſpirit to our firſt parents in Paradiſe: The notion of being gods ſtrangely wrought upon them, and procured our miſery. This was the firſt temptation of Satan, and is the firſt ſtep to idolatry, which of all his works may juſtly be ſtiled his chief maſter-piece. It is true, the wiſeſt of the Pagans aſſerted One God, and knew that there were not different deities, but the generality of them thought and believed otherwiſe; and the philoſophers themſelves complied with theſe vain worſhippers, and ſo confirmed the people in their error.

Nothing is more evident, than that the greater part of the world heretofore declared for a multiplicity of gods. The idea of God, like ſome great mirror, was broken in pieces by the Heathens, and in every one of theſe they ſaw a deity, or fancied they did ſo. Every attribute of God, was a diſtinct God. But this was more pardonable; they proceeded to worſhip the heavenly bodies, and aſcribed life and divinity to them. Nay, they ranſacked for gods and goddeſſes below, as well as above: They found them in the earth, and in the deep, as well as in the heavens. The number of theſe deities had reached to thirty thouſand in Heſiod's time; and they were almoſt as many more afterwards; for, if Varro's computation be right, there were above that number of gods and goddeſſes worſhipped by the Europeans alone. Nor would one way of worſhipping them ſerve their turn.

There were as many various rites and different ſacrifices, as there were deities; the ſolemnities which were performed to one, would not ſuffice another. Nothing forſooth would pleaſe Ceres but a ſow, nothing would ſerve Æſculapius but a cock, and the moſt acceptable offering to Neptune was a bull. The Pagans fancied that one god delighted in this oblation, and another in that; and therefore to be ſure to pleaſe them they had particular ſervices and diverſities of worſhip for them. Egypt was the moſt fruitful ſoil for this; it furniſhed the reſt of the world with gods. The Grecians (who afterwards ſtocked the Romans) took the names of their gods, their temples, their altars, their images, and moſt of their ſuperſtitious ceremonies from that counrry, as Herodotus teſtifieth, in Euterpe. And with him agrees Ammianus Marcellinus, who poſitively tells us, that all idolatry came from Egypt, lib. xxii. c 43. And Strabo and others acquaint us, lib. xvii. that all ſorts of living creatures were worſhipped by the inhabitants of that place. That ſheep, and ſuch-like animals, had Divine Reſpect paid to them, is atteſted by the moſt ancient and undoubted annals of Holy Scripture: For it is ſaid, in Gen. xlvi. 34. that a ſhepherd is an abomination to an Egyptian, viz. becauſe the Egyptians did not kill or eat ſheep, or ſuch like animals, but looked upon them as Sacred. Hence Moſes ſaith, Shall we ſacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not ſtone us? Exod. viii. 36. i. e. If we ſacrifice ſheep or oxen, creatures that they worſhip, and abominably idolize, they will be incenſed againſt us. They abhorred the Jews, becauſe they were generally ſhepherds, and fed upon that ſort of animals, and uſed them in ſacrifice. And this, it is probable, was the reaſon why, when Joſeph entertained his brethren at dinner, they did eat aſunder, becauſe it was an abomination to the Egyptians to eat bread with the Hebrews, Gen. xliii. 32. For (as Onkelos here adds) the Hebrews eat thoſe animals which the Egyptians worſhip. And for this cauſe the Iſraelites lived apart in the land of Goſhen. And beſides, they were not permitted to ſacrifice all the time they were in Egypt, as appears from thoſe words of God to Moſes, Exod. ix. 13. Let the people go that they may ſerve me, i. e. that they may ſacrifice unto me, as appears from ch. x. 25. which implies, that they were not permitted to ſacrifice before; and the reaſon was, becauſe the Egyptians would not let them kill, and offer in the fire thoſe animals which they had ſo great a regard for, and even deified.

So beſotted were theſe Gentile adorers, that not only irrational but inanimate creatures were deified by them. You might have ſeen the greateſt men, to whom others bowed and did lowly obeiſance, proſtrate themſelves to ſtocks and ſtones, to wood, and braſs, and iron, ſhaped into gods; and by the art of maſons, carpenters and ſmiths, made deities. This was the idolatry which obtained ſo much in the world, this was the capital enormity of mankind, this was the main guilt which they were polluted with, as Tertullian called it. Our learned Dr. Hammond thinks this is meant by the Apoſtle in Rom. viii. 20. The creature was made ſubject to vanity; for he takes κτίσις for the Gentile world, and vanity for idolatry, De Idololat. cap. 1. as this is called very frequently in the Old Teſtament. The Heathen world was every where enſlaved, ſubjected to this vile ſin, though not willingly, i. e. as this author expounds it; the Devil forced them to it, otherwiſe he would not be appeaſed.

But this groſs folly and madneſs was ſoon diſgraced and diſcountenanced by the introducing of Chriſtianity, and even in Egypt, the mother and nurſe of all idolatry, where garlicks and onions (no very fragrant deities) had veneration paid them, and cats and crocodiles were good faſhionable gods; where they worſhipped all things in nature, where every thing living or dead was a deity, even here this prodigious idolatry was deſtroyed by Chriſt's coming; for upon Mark's preaching there, and at Alexandria eſpecially, images were ſoon demoliſhed, the counterfeit gods were thrown away, and the only True God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt were worſhipped with an unanimous veneration. At Rome itſelf, and even in Nero's palace, and in all the territories belonging to the Roman emperors, there were ſome to be found who diſcovered their hatred and deteſtation of idols, and adored the true God in ſpirit and in truth. But the Pagan worſhip had got ſuch deep rooting in the hearts of men, and had by long cuſtom and preſcription ſo gained their good will and approbation, that almoſt four centuries of years had paſſed after Chriſt's incarnation, before it could be univerſally extirpated, and the true worſhip of God become the religion of the Roman empire. Conſtantine the Great made the firſt remarkable and generous eſſay towards this glorious work; in his reign it was that idolatry received its greateſt mortification: and he was ſucceded by many worthies that imitated him. Let all the images be plucked up from their ſeats, was Honorius's conſtitution; in Cod. Theodoſ. l. 16. Tit. 11. and by the edicts of Theodoſius and Valentinian, the idol temples were all demoliſhed, and idolatry every where in their dominions deſtroyed, and all falſe gods diſcarded.

Thus the bleſſed work went on with great life and vigour, being ſet forward by royal hands, and thoſe hands being ſtrengthned by the Son of God. Therefore the pious father ſaid well, When the madneſs of idolatry and impiety poſſeſſed the world, and the knowledge of the true God was baniſhed, to whom did it belong to inſtruct the world aright, concerning the true worſhip of the Father, but to the Son? Lib. de Incarnat. Verbi Dei. And in the ſame place he farther ſets forth the vaſt ſpreading of idolatry over the world, and Chriſtians more powerful deſtroying of it. And,

You ſhall find, that this glorious atchievement of Chriſt in cruſhing idolatry, which was grown ſo prevalent every where, is made the great proof and confirmation of the truth of the Chriſtian religion, and is inſiſted upon with mighty force and reaſon by all the ancient apologiſts for Chriſtianity. And,

That this was one great deſign of our Saviour's manifeſting himſelf in the world, is evident from many promiſes and Prophecies in the Old Teſtament concerning the Meſſias and his kingdom; as that of the Evangelical

Prophets; Iſa. ii. 20. They ſhall caſt their idols of ſilver, and their idols of gold, to the bats, and to the moles, (to the moles, fit company you will ſay, for them that have eyes and ſee not, as idols are deſcribed by the Pſalmiſt.) The meaning of this prophetick writer is, that the enlightened and converted Gentiles ſhall renounce their beloved idolatry, and with indignation throw their idols and images into the dark corners of the earth. Whereas before they placed them in the light, and ſet them up to be ſeen, now they ſhall be aſhamed of them, and being aſhamed of them ſhall hide them, and caſt them into thoſe obſcure holes, where bats and moles lie hid under ground.

To the ſame purpoſe is that of the Prophet Jeremiah, The Gentiles ſhall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and ſhall ſay, Our fathers inherited lies and vanities; Jer. xvi. 19, 20. (which are terms in the Scripture ſtile to expreſs falſe gods; ſee Iſa. xxviii. 15. and xliv. 20. Jer. xiii. 25. Hoſ. vii. 1. Am. ii. 4. Rom. i. 25.) but we will reject them, for ſhall a man make gods to himſelf that are no gods? And in ſeveral places, both Iſaiah and this Prophet inſiſt upon this, that the Meſſias ſhould bring the Gentiles out of the darkneſs of idolatry to the light of the Goſpel, and the acknowledgement of the true God. In Ezek. xxxvii. 23. there is another prediction of the like nature, Iſrael ſhall not defile themſelves any more with idols, nor with their deteſtable things: which latter clauſe is but an explication of the former, for Shikkutzim and Βδελύγματα (which are the words in the original and the Septuagint) are frequently uſed to ſignify idols, which are deteſtable in the eyes of God. And,

Zephaniah foretels, that the Lord will famiſh all the gods of the earth; Zeph. ii. 11. which is a very remarkable paſſage, and alludes to the fond conceit of the Pagans, which is mentioned in Deut. xxxii. 38. that their gods did eat the fat of their ſacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings. To which it is probable God himſelf was pleaſed to allude in Pſal. l. 13. Will I eat the fleſh of bulls, or drink the blood of Goats? And in Iſa. xliii. 24. Neither haſt thou filled me with the fat of thy ſacrifices.

It was a notion among the heathen worſhippers, that the gods were nouriſhed with the ſteam of their ſacrifices; and in relation to that the Prophet's prediction is, that thoſe gods ſhall be famiſhed: They ſhall not, according to the fond notion of the Gentile world, be any longer fed from the altars, they ſhall be ſtarved when Chriſtianity takes place amongſt men, for the Pagan ſacrifices ſhall then be laid aſide, and idolatry caſhiered. All theſe Prophecies were plainly accompliſhed, when our Saviour came and commiſſioned his Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel to the whole world. This threw down the idolatrous images, and in many places the very idols themſelves fell down proſtrate on the ground, and, as it were, worſhipped the Holy Jeſus.

But as Chriſt gave a fatal blow to idolatrous worſhip, ſo I am more particularly to prove (under this head) that he did confound the worſhipping of devils, which had been a thing very faſhionable in the world before Chriſt came into it. I ſay, the worſhipping of devils, the higheſt ſtrain of idolatry, was confounded by our Saviour's appearing: For it ſeems the Devil could not be content to cheat the world with his oracles, to enter into mens bodies, and to make leagues and contracts with perſons, but (as an effort above all theſe) he affected to be worſhipped and adored as a god. This is confeſſed by Porphyrius in his Book of Abſtinence from Animals; and Euſebius and Auguſtin, and other fathers make uſe of what he ſaith there againſt the Pagans, whom they undertake to confute. That the gods whom the Gentiles ſometimes worſhipped, were devils, is alſo the acknowledgement of Triſmegiſtus in his Aſclepius. And it is owned by all the wiſe and underſtanding heads among them that the ſervice paid to many of their gods was a kind of adoring the Devil.

It is well known that theſe worſhippers could, by certain magick ſpells make theſe infernal fiends come to their images when they pleaſed; and when they had brought them thither, they worſhipped theſe wicked ghoſts to appeaſe their fury, and that they might do them no harm. Beſides, the particulars which I inſiſted on before, do ſufficiently evince the preſent point; for the conſulting the Devil when he ſpake in oracles, and dealing with him by practiſing witchcraft and ſorcery, were a palpable forſaking of the true God, and ſetting up the Devil for a god.

Theſe were giving Divine Honour to the prince of darkneſs. And, which is moſt convincing, do not the infallible oracles of Scripture expreſly tell us, that the idolatrous Jews ſacrificed unto devils, not to God? Deut. xxxii. 17. which (to confirm the truth and certainty of it) is repeated in Pſal. cvi. 37. They ſacrificed their ſons and daughters unto devils. And if I be not miſtaken, the Pſalmiſt had before referred to this abominable practice, ver. 28. They are the ſacrifices of the dead, i. e. (as I conceive) the ſacrifices that were offered to the manes, and to the Stygian Jupiter or Pluto the god of the dead; theſe are meant here by zibche methim, the ſacrifices of the dead.

I know ſome writers have leſſened and minced this idolatry, as well as that before ſpoken of, and tell us that the Pagans all along worſhipped God, though under a falſe repreſentation. It is partly true, that the beſt of the Heathens did ſo, but others did not: And as for thoſe that defend the contrary, they are confuted by downright authority from Scripture, which acquaints us, that they worſhipped even devils; for ſacrificing to them, is worſhipping them. If they can evade this, let them.

I could add, that the Hebrew maſters were of opinion that ſome of the Jews worſhipped the Devil in ſhape of a goat in woods and deſerts, becauſe the word ſagnir is both demon and hircus, Lev. xvii 7. 2 Chron. xi. 15 Iſa. xiii. 21. and xxxiv. 14. And it is likely this worſhipping of ſatyrs was a piece of deviliſh idolatry which they learnt and brought from Egypt, where it was practiſed. But this we are certain of from a more ſure word, as you heard, that the devils themſelves were adored by them. And concerning the Gentiles worſhip, the Apoſtle is peremptory, 1 Cor. x. 20. The things which the Gentiles ſacrificed, they ſacrificed to devils, and not to God. Whereas the Greeks uſed to call the victims or beaſts which they offered, θεόθυτα; the Apoſtle on the contrary plainly ſtiles them, εἰδωλόθυτα, things ſacrificed to idols, 1 Cor. viii. 1, 4, 7. and x. 19, 28. In which places idols are no other than diabolick ſpirits which inhabited in thoſe idols.

But Chriſt by his coming ſoon put a period to this helliſh uſage. When the Devil was ſo impudent as to make that offer to him, All theſe things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me; he preſently rebuked the bold ſpirit, by alledging what was written, not only in the law, but in all mens hearts, that they ſhould worſhip the Lord their God, and ſerve him only. And by the whole ſyſtem of his Heavenly doctrine he built up this truth, and pulled down the contrary, and all the leaſt tendencies to it. After our Saviour left this earth, his Apoſtles and followers managed the ſame work, and endeavoured by all means to run down this curſed project of the Devil, viz. of his being worſhipped.

As a particular effect of their care to baffle this deſign, we read, that the primitive Chriſtians ſolemnly vowed at their baptiſm, to renounce the Devil and all his works. By which, ſaith Tertullian, de ſpectac. c. 4. is principally meant idolatry, yea, and the worſt kind of idolatry, a giving Divine Honour and Worſhip to thoſe that are devils, and not gods, a ſin very common at Chriſt's coming into the world, the greateſt part of it at that time living in this vile practice: Therefore, ſaith this father, this was made a chief part of the baptiſmal vow, that the proſelytes and converts to Chriſtianity, ſhould in a ſolemn manner bid defiance to that deteſtable enormity of the Heathens. Conformably to this our learned Catechiſt, Dr. Hammond, pract. cat. l. 6. ſect. 3. p. 375. in reply to that queſtion, What is meant by the Devil and all his works? anſwers thus, Certainly the principal thing here renounced, is the falſe gods, i. e. devils, which the Heathen world did worſhip ſo univerſally before Chriſt's time, and againſt which the Catechiſts (who prepared all for baptiſm) did firſt labour to fortify their diſciples, and are for that cauſe called in the ancient Church exorciſts, as thoſe that caſt out theſe devils. Very near a-kin to this, is that which is added next in the ſolemn vow at baptiſm, viz. The renouncing the vain pomp and glory of the world: For that word pomp in its original meaning, refers to the idolatrous ſhews of the Heathens, it properly ſignifying ſending of ſome thing, and carrying it up and down to be ſeen and expoſed: So that hereby are denoted thoſe ſplendid ſights and ſtately proceſſions in uſe of old among the Heathens; at which ſolemn times the images, the thrones, the ornaments, and all the habiliments, as alſo the oblations and ſacrifices which were to be offered to their gods, were carried openly through the ſtreets, and honour was done to theſe falſe deities. The ancient fathers of the Church very ſtrictly cautioned their flock againſt theſe deviliſh cuſtoms; and particularly when they admitted converts into the Church by baptiſm, they took care to fortify them againſt them. Hence may be obſerved the antiquity of the form and office of baptiſm, which our Church makes uſe of at this day.

The ſolemn renunciation of the Devil and his works, and of the pomp and vanity of the world, is as old as primitive Chriſtianity. Yea, ſome learned men have thought, that the Apoſtle Peter alludes to it, in his 1ſt Epiſt. ch. iii. 21. and that the anſwer of a good conſcience there, refers to the manner of interrògation and anſwer uſed in baptiſm. But this by the by. That which you are chiefly to take notice of is, that whereas the wicked ghoſts and demons were ambitious of Divine Adoration, it pleaſed God ſo to bleſs and ſucceed the Chriſtian Religion, that in a ſhort time this wicked uſage wore away, this curſed work of the Devil came to nought, the Chriſtian faith being, by the wonderful providence of Heaven, propagated ſo univerſally through the world.

Sixthly, I conceive, that by the works of the Devil are meant here eſpecially thoſe ſins which have moſt of his image upon them, and wherein men more immediately and directly reſemble that accurſed ſpirit; thoſe works which the Devil chiefly tempts men to, and which he himſelf is obſerved to practiſe moſt. As firſt, malice and envy are the proper guiſe and character of devils; for theſe lapſed ſpirits being irrecoverably damned themſelves, are fired with revenge and malice againſt all mankind; being thruſt down from Heaven, they endeavour to hinder us from coming thither. Wherefore envy (which is a grieving at the good and welfare of others) ſporting with mens infirmities, expoſing them to obloquy and diſgrace, delighting in the miſeries of thoſe we affect not, rejoicing at the evils which befal others; theſe have all an impreſs of the deviliſh ſpirit on them. Our Saviour pronounced concerning the Phariſees, whom he found to be envious and malicious, that the works of their father they would do, plainly giving us to underſtand, that theſe vices are more eminently diabolical. But the laws of Chriſtianity ſtrictly enjoin us, to lay aſide all malice and envy, 1 Pet. ii. 1. and command us to rejoice with them that rejoice, to weep with them that weep, and to be kindly affectioned one towards another, and to delight in the welfare and happineſs of our brethren, Rom. xii. 10—15. Again,

Rage and paſſion, bitter ſtrife and contention may be juſtly ranked among the Devil's works. Schiſm and faction are from him, who was the firſt mutineer and rebel againſt Heaven, and ever ſince delights in wars and tumults, and loves to ruffle and embroil the world, and raiſe tempeſts and ſtorms in it. But Chriſt Jeſus, our Bleſſed Peace-maker and Reconciler, came to remove all grounds of difference, and to introduce univerſal love and charity. And Chriſtianity it ſelf is furniſhed with peaceable and healing principles, and offers all the motives and incentives to it imaginable. The laws of Chriſt are fully ſet againſt all undue paſſion and choler, and there are in no inſtitution whatſoever ſo ſevere prohibitions of this diabolical temper, Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, be put away from you, Epheſ. iv. 31. Let not the ſun go down on your wrath; neither give place to the Devil, ver. 26, 27. Where we learn, that the fire of hell burns in angry breaſts; the brimſtone of the bottomleſs-pit may be ſmelt there. He that is overcome of paſſion, gives place to the Devil.

I add in the next place, that pride is perfectly diabolical. It was this which firſt infected Lucifer and his fellow-angels, and thruſt them down from their Heavenly Dignity, and made them, what they now are, devils. But our Saviour on the contrary throws down pride, and exalts humility, and commends it to all his followers from his own example, Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly. This is a right Chriſtian temper, and is Heavenly and God-like, and whoſo foſters it in his breaſt is beloved of God, and all good men. Reproaching and reviling are no leſs the Devil's works, and thence he hath his name given him in the Greek: A devil and a reviler are terms convertible. It is the office and employ of the evil ſpirit, firſt to raiſe, and then to keep up ſlanders and contumelious reports. But behold, our Bleſſed Maſter hath left us rules diametrically oppoſite to theſe practices. We muſt put away from us all evil-ſpeaking, Epheſ. iv. 31. We are not ſuffered to revile, though we be reviled: Yea, we are to be poſſeſſors of that charity which thinketh no evil, 1 Cor. xiii. 5.

Lying and falſhood, craft and treachery, moſt ſenſibly diſcover the deviliſh nature. Theſe windings and crooked courſes are the goings of the ſerpent. We are told, that the Devil put it into Judas's heart to betray Chriſt, that we may thence infer, that treachery and perfidiouſneſs are more immediately from that falſe ſpirit: And for this reaſon chiefly our Saviour doth once and again call this mock-apoſtle, a devil, John vi. 70. and viii. 44. But certainly nothing is more oppoſite to Chriſtianity, than this baſe and ſordid vice. And Chriſt and his Apoſtles, both by precept and example, commend fidelity, truth and ſincerity, and diſallow of all guile and hypocriſy, and herein ſhew themſelves oppoſite to the wicked ſpirit, who is a liar, and the father of lies, John viii. 44.

In the ſame place it is ſaid, He was a murderer from the beginning; which ſuggeſts to us another particular. He began betimes to exert his cruel nature; in the firſt ſetting out of mankind, he ſtirr'd up Cain to kill his brother; and ever ſince this ſavage and bloody ſpirit hath ſhewed it ſelf in the world. It is the inſeparable property of the roaring lion to ſeek whom he may devour. He is the deſtroyer, Apollyon is his name, Rev. ix. 11. and he acts agreeably to it. For,

This evil ſpirit taught parents to make a burnt-offering of their children unto Moloch, to ſacrifice them alive in the valley of Hinnom; ſo that the name of hell, Gehenna, takes its denomination from that bloody uſage. This Moloch was the god of the Ammonites; but it appears from Jer. vii. 31. and Pſal. cvi. 37. that even the Jews, God's ſelect people, burnt their ſons and daughters to this idol, nay, although they had been particularly cautioned againſt it by an early prohibition, Levit. xviii. 21. And it is clear from that place in the fore-mentioned Pſalm, that the children who were offered to Moloch, were ſlain and burnt. They ſacrificed their ſons and daughters: Jisbecku, Mactarunt, they killed them: And therefore it immediately follows, They ſhed innocent blood, even the blood of their ſons, and of their daughters; and the land was polluted with blood. And,

Who hath not read of the barbarous effuſion of human blood on the altars of the Painims? The Jews, it is probable, had it from them, and particularly from the Canaanites, who (as we are aſcertained from Deut. xii. 31.) were infected with this cruelty: Their ſons and their daughters they burnt in the fire to their gods. And an impious example of this we have in 2 Kings iii. 27. where we read, that the king of Moab offered up the king of Edom's ſon (the heir of the kingdom) for a burnt-offering. Theſe Heathens were not content with ſacrificing of beaſts, but they muſt needs offer human ſacrifices to their dæmons. And it is ſtrange to ſee how this vile uſage ſpread it ſelf, and prevailed among all nations. That it did ſo among the old Grecians, is teſtified by ſeveral authors profane, as Virgil. Æneid. 2. Diodor. Sicul. and as Euſeb. Præp. Evang. lib. 6. eccleſiaſtical: Particularly we are told by Porphyrius, De Abſtin. lib. 2. that the Lacedemonians uſed this cruelty, and ſacrificed a living man to Mars. The reſt of the Grecians did the ſame, or the like: Suid. in περίψημα. Among the Trojans likewiſe ſacrificing of human blood was in uſe, as we learn from Homer and Virgil. So among the Perſians men and women were uſually killed in ſacrifice to Mithra. However, great torments were to be undergone by all that were entred into the rites of their worſhip: No leſs than fourſcore kinds of puniſhments they were to ſuffer firſt; ſee J. Mart. Apol. 2. Tertul. de Præſcript. Suidas in Μίθρα. That the Africans, and particularly the Carthagenians, ſacrificed children to their gods, is atteſted by ſufficient writers: Nay, Plutarch tells us, that thoſe amongſt them that had no children, bought ſome of poor people to ſacrifice them. This was the practice of the Ethiopians, Saracens, Scythians, Phœnicians and Tyrians. Our neighbours, the ancient Gauls and Germans (as Cæſar de Bello Gall. l. 6. relates) were guilty of this bloody folly. Nor were the old inhabitants of this iſland, where we live, free from this wild and extravagant practice.

The Britiſh Druids held, that the wrath of their gods could not be appeaſed in ſome caſes but with the life of man; and accordingly, (as Dio Caſſius, in Nerone. and Tacitus, Annal. 14. report) the people of this iſle, led on by their prieſts, frequently offered theſe barbarous ſacrifices. Nothing was more common with the Heathens, than to offer up an innocent perſon to the gods in time of imminent danger, to pacify their wrath, and remove the publick calamity. This example of deviliſh cruelty was, I ſay, very frequent among the Pagans before our Saviour's coming, and a while after: But as ſoon as Chriſtianity had got any footing in the world, it began to diſappear. After Chriſt had offered himſelf a ſacrifice on the croſs, and his Holy Religion was propagated, this cuſtom of ſacrificing men ceaſed in a great part of the world. It is true, this cruel and tyrannical ſway of the evil ſpirit is not yet wholly deſtroyed. The ſacrificing of children to the Devil was in uſe not long ago among the Americans; ſee Hackluit, Purchas, and others. We read of the dreadful and aſtoniſhing apparitions of Satan to the people of Florida and Brazil, and other countres where Paganiſm is ſtill in its Meridian, Theſe devil-worſhippers complain, that he cuts and tears their fleſh, and miſerably torments their poor carcaſes. Indeed, thoſe that give an account of the Americans and Indians, (as Acoſta and others) do conſtantly take notice, that ſlaſhing and cutting their bodies are uſual in their worſhip, becauſe Chriſtianity has not yet totally ſpread it ſelf over thoſe countries.

The bloody ſpectacles of the gladiators were no ſmall inſtace of the Devil's empire in the Pagan World, which delighted in ſlaughter, and made it one of their publick ſports to ſee men kill one another upon the theatre. It was uſual not only to expoſe men to fight with beaſts, and at laſt to be torn by them, but they kept others to fight with their own kind, and to diſpatch one another. Of the former of theſe ſpeaks that pious Biſhop Salvian; "In thoſe ſpectacles, ſaith he, the main thing that pleaſed them was, to feaſt their eyes with the ſlaughter of men, and to ſee wild beaſts gorge themſelves with human fleſh, and that with an incredible ſatisfaction and delight." This was the lot of ſome condemned malefactors, and of ſome that were taken captive in war. Theſe, who had fought with men, were now compelled to fight with beaſts, and ſo to loſe their lives. And ſome think that the Bleſſed Paul was put upon this ſharp ſervice at Epheſus, for they take that to be the meaning of his words, when he ſaith, He fought with beaſts at Epheſus, 1 Cor. xv. 32. i. e. not with wicked men (as it is generally interpreted) who are irrational and ſavage creatures, and men only in ſhape, but really with wild beaſts, with whom he was condemned to fight for his life, this being the puniſhment inflicted on him. This is the interpretation which Chryſoſtom and Ambroſe give of the words:

This was in thoſe times, and afterwards, an uſual puniſhment inflicted on the Chriſtians. Chriſtianos ad Leones, was the peoples cry, Tertul. Apol. c. 40. Though, I grant, that merely to be thrown to the beaſts, was another thing; there was no fighting then, they were thrown to be torn in pieces preſently, and to be devoured, as that glorious martyr Ignatius was, Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 33. But others were expoſed to fight with them, and that on the publick theatres; and they were armed for that purpoſe, and if they could get the maſtery of the beaſts (of which the inſtances are very rare) they were ſet free; which known cuſtom and practice it is likely the Apoſtles θηριομαχεῖν, in the forenamed place, may be well applied.

But the latter ſort of prizes, viz. where men fought with their own kind, was the worſt. In theſe bloody and inhuman matches, they firſt brought ſlaves on the theatre to combat one another, and afterwards others of better quality. Beſides, ſome were hired to undertake this employment, and ſome were bred up and diſciplined to it. It grew an art to diet, to arm, to fit them for this purpoſe. Nor can it be expreſſed how the people were taken with this ſport, and how they flocked to it, Cic. orat. pro Seſtio. No entertainment pleaſed them like this bloody fencing. Here they could kill men at their pleaſure; by turning up the thumb they could at any time adjudge the combatants to continue the fight, and they had power to keep them fighting till they died on the place; And when any of them did ſo, others were preſently fetched and placed in their room, to fight with the victor, till one of them fell down on the ſpot. Lactantius hath well expreſſed it thus; They ſhew themſelves very angry, and grow enraged, unleſs one of the combatants be ſlain very ſpeedily: And as if they thirſted after human blood, they hate all delays, and call for other freſh fighters that are not weary and faint, but will briskly fall on, and thereby ſatiate the eyes of the ſpectators; ſee lib. 6. c. 20.

From theſe paſſages we may be informed how mad the world was upon ſlaughter and bloodſhed: We ſee what ſtrange immoralities theſe civilized people admitted among them, what barbarous and outragious uſages were approved of by them. This I might well mention as one inſtance of the Devil's working among them. But the Chriſtians continually declaimed againſt thoſe bloody games, they preached and wrote againſt theſe inhuman combats; and at laſt the Chriſtian emperors ſtrictly forbad them, Euſeb. in vit. Conſtant. M. l. 4. You may read in the ancient apologiſts, how theſe unlawful and mad ſhews are ſtruck at, and how the Chriſtians are particularly warned againſt them. A Chriſtian was not permitted to be a ſpectator of them, but by his profeſſion and character, he was obliged to declare againſt them, and draw off others, if he could, from being preſent at them. Hear the words of one of the moſt learned apologizers for the Chriſtian Religion againſt the Pagans; We, ſaith he, abſtain from, and are averſe to theſe ſpectacles of the ſword-players, being perſwaded that there is no great difference between being a ſpectator of theſe bloody prizes, and an author of the bloodſhed there committed, Athenagoras, in legat. pro Chriſtian. Thus the primitive Chriſtians ſhewed their abhorrence of theſe entertainments, and ſo at length they came to be wholly laid aſide, and accounted utterly unlawful. Thus this work of the Devil was deſtroyed; which we cannot but attribute to the manifeſtation of the Son of God upon the earth, and to his holy inſtitution, which promotes tenderheartedneſs and pity, and condemns whatever is ſavage and bloody. But,

The ſlaughter and murder of ſouls are the worſt and higheſt cruelty, the main work and buſineſs of that implacable enemy of mankind. Thoſe curſed ſpirits being fallen themſelves from God, endeavour the apoſtacy of all mankind; and this they do, by drawing men into error, and by tempting them to ſin and wickedneſs. They are as buſy in debauching mens minds by erroneous opinions and falſe doctrines, as they are in any other deſign; and they get as much by it: For by corrupting mens underſtandings and notions, they prepare the way for all other miſchiefs to enſue. Hereſies are of the Devil, and lead to him; and therefore, Polycarp knew what he ſaid, when he called Marcion (that arch-heretick) the firſt-born of Satan. But the inveigling to practical error, which is no other than vice, gives him chiefly his denomination of tempter; and conſequently thoſe who allure others to vice, thoſe who entice them to evil courſes, are to be called by no ſofter terms, than thoſe of murderers and devils; for tempting, i. e. drawing others to ſin, is properly the work of the Devil; this is that which he conſtantly practiſeth, and takes ſo much delight in. But,

The Bleſſed Founder of Chriſtianity is a Saviour and lover of ſouls, who thus expoſtulated when he was on earth; What is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? This Jeſus was loving and kindhearted, and ſubmitted to a painful and ignominious death, to give an undeniable demonſtration of his compaſſion to the ſouls of men. He aſcended the croſs, and ſhed his blood there, to convince the world how tender he was of their immortal concerns, and everlaſting welfare: And let me ſpeak a great word, he would even now leave all his glories, and die once more for man, if it were neceſſary for the procuring of his happineſs. Therefore,

Carnality, Lewdneſs and uncleanneſs, may fitly be ſtiled the Devil's works. It is well known, that theſe prevailed even in the moſt ſolemn rites and devotions of the Pagans. As the poets repreſent the gods lewd and laſcivious, ſo the moſt ſerious authors tell us of the impure and filthy ſacrifices, the villanous and beaſtly rites performed to them. They relate the obſcene feaſts of Bacchus and Priapus, of Flora and Venus, and acquaint us that they kept their Lupercalia, or the feſtivals of Pan, in running up and down naked, behaving themſelves in that lewd manner, which cannot be named without injuring chaſte and modeſt ears. Of the Eleuſinian ſolemnities, in honour of Ceres and Proſerpina, we have ſome account from Tertullian, Adv. Valentin. and the religious ceremonies of Iſis were as lewd and obſcene, ſaith Plutarch; De Iſid. & Oſor. l. 1. It is certain that lewdneſs and wantonneſs were the very ingredients of their worſhip, and their very temples were ſtews. Arnobius makes it his buſineſs in his fifth book, to ſhew how obſcene and unchaſte, how immodeſt and ſhameleſs their rites and ceremonies, their ſtories and relations of their gods were. In brief, uncleanneſs hath been ſo eminently confirmed to be the work of the Devil, that the foul fiends have ſometimes aſſumed bodies to act it in, as ſome have thought; ſee Auguſtin. de. civ. Dei. lib. 15. Bodin. contr. Wier. But Chriſt coming in the fleſh, deſtroyed even the deeds of the fleſh: He choſe to be born of a pure virgin, that he might give a pattern of ſpotleſs purity in the world; and the deſign of his Holy Inſtitution, was to ſanctify mens bodies and ſouls, and to fit them for the unſtained pleaſures of another life. Thus I have finiſhed my task, having largely and particularly ſhewed you, what the works of the Devil are, either ſuch works as are done by that evil ſpirit, or ſuch vices and practices in men, as more nearly approach to the deviliſh nature and temper; and I have at the ſame time proved that our Saviour and his religion, do overthrow and deſtroy theſe works of the infernal ſpirit.

I will only add a critical remark on that manner of expreſſion in the text, [ἵνα λύσῃ] that he may loſe (our Engliſh word, it is likely, coming from thence) or diſſolve, &c. for that is the exact rendring of the word. This ſuppoſes bonds and fetters: We were in durance and captivity, we were ſhut and locked up in the priſon houſe, we were under the power of Satan and dominion of ſin: But the merciful Jeſus came to reſcue and redeem mankind, to knock off their fetters, and to ſet them at liberty. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, and for this only. He came not, as the Jews fondly imagined concerning their Meſſias) to be a great earthly monarch, to wage war, and to beat the Romans out of Judea, and to make his people rich and wealthy, and to promote them to great honours. This alas was a poor deſign, and not worthy of the Meſſias: But he came to effect a thing of greater moment, even of univerſal concern, and that which is more noble and glorious than all wordly empire and ſovereignty. He came to free his people from the tyranny of Satan, to vanquiſh the prince of darkneſs who had enſlaved all mankind.

Or, this word gives us a true notion of our Saviour's deſign, thus: The Devil had corrupted man, had been the great inſtrument at firſt of depraving his very nature, and ever ſince he hath made it his work to debauch mens minds and manners, and by all ways imaginable, to render them like unto himſelf. Hereupon the Son of God was ſent, ἵνα λύσῃ, that he might diſſolve, defeat, undo theſe works of the Devil. This is the ſhort and plain account of the grand end of Chriſt's being manifeſted in the world, of his incarnation, doctrine, life, ſufferings, death, and all his undertakings whatſoever; it was no other than this, to undo, to annul all that the Devil had done in the world. Chriſt's task was to pull down what Satan had built up, to untye, to untwiſt all his knots and intrigues, to baffle all his plots and contrivances, to unravel the inchantments of the evil ſpirit, to break the ſnares of Satan, and to deſtroy the deſtroyer.

CHAP. IV.

1 He warneth them not to believe all teachers, who boaſt of the ſpirit, but to try them by the rules of the Catholick faith: 7 and by many reaſons exhorteth to brotherly love.

BEloved, believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits whether they are of God: becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world.

2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every ſpirit that confeſſeth that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God.

3 And every ſpirit that confeſſeth not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God: and this is that ſpirit of antichriſt, whereof you have heard that it ſhould come, and even now already is it in the world.

4 Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

5 They are of the world: therefore ſpeak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

6 We are of God: he that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error.

7 Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth, is born of God, and knoweth God.

8 He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love.

9 In this was manifeſted the love of God towards us, becauſe that God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

10 Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins.

11 Beloved, if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another.

12 No man hath ſeen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.

13 Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit.

14 And we have ſeen and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

15 Whoſoever ſhall confeſs that Jeſus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.

16 And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

17 Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldneſs in the day of judgment: becauſe as he is, ſo are we in this world.

18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love caſteth out fear: becauſe fear hath torment:

ment: he that feareth is not made perfect in love.

19 We love him; becauſe he firſt loved us.

20 If a man ſay, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath ſeen, how can he love God whom he hath not ſeen?

21 And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother alſo.

CHAP. V.

He that loveth God loveth his children, and keepeth his commandments; 3 which to the faithful are light, and not grievous. 9 Jeſus is the Son of God, able to ſave us, 14 and to hear our prayers which we make for our ſelves, and for others.

WHoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him alſo that is begotten of him.

2 By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments.

3 For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: And his commandments are not grievous.

4 For whatſoever is born of God overcommeth the world: And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

5 Who is he that overcommeth the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God.

6 This his he that came by water and blood, even Jeſus Chriſt; not by water only, but by water and blood: and it is the Spirit that beareth witneſs, becauſe the Spirit is truth.

7 For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghoſt; and theſe three are one.

8 And there are three that bear witneſs in earth, the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood: and theſe three agree in one.

9 If we receive the witneſs of men, the witneſs of God is greater: for this is the witneſs of God, which he hath teſtified of his Son.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witneſs in himſelf: he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar, becauſe he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.

11 And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son.

12 He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.

13 Theſe things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

14 And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us.

15 And if we know that he hear us, whatſoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we deſired of him.

16 If any man ſee his brother ſin a ſin, which is not unto death, he ſhall ask, and he ſhall give him life for them that ſin not unto death. There is a ſin unto death: I do not ſay that he ſhall pray for it.

17 All unrighteouſneſs is ſin: And there is a ſin not unto death.

18 We know that whoſoever is born of God ſinneth not, but he that is begotten of God, keepeth himſelf, and that wicked one toucheth him not.

19 And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedneſs.

20 And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding that we may know him that is true: and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jeſus Chriſt. This is the true God, and eternal life.

21 Little children, keep your ſelves from idols. Amen.

Critical

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,
ON The SECOND EPISTLE
OF JOHN.

The INTRODUCTION.

The Apoſtle in this Epiſtle ſtiles himſelf the Elder, partly becauſe he was then above ninety years of age, as Beza on the place obſerves, and alſo becauſe he preſided over all the Churches of the leſſer Aſia.

This Epiſtle was wrote to a lady of quality, and to her family, who had embraced the Chriſtian Faith (and whoſe ſiſter with her children were known to the Apoſtle, ver. 13.) much to the ſame purpoſe as the former, to teſtify and confirm them in the true faith, and in the true practice of charity and Chriſtian love, and warning them to beware of the deceivers mentioned in the other Epiſtle, who denied that Jeſus was come in the fleſh.

He exhorteth a certain honourable matron with her children, to perſevere in Chriſtian love and belief, 8 leſt they loſe the reward of their former profeſſion; 10 and to have nothing to do with thoſe ſeducers that bring not the true doctrine of Chriſt Jeſus.

THE elder unto the elect lady, and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but alſo all they that have known the truth;

2 For the truths ſake which dwelleth in us, and ſhall be with us for ever:

3 Grace be with you, mercy and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

4 I rejoyced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

5 And now, I beſeech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another.

6 And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye ſhould walk in it.

7 For many deceivers are entred into the world, who confeſs not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh. This is a deceiver and an antichriſt.

8 Look to your ſelves, that we loſe not thoſe things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

9 Whoſoever tranſgreſſeth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Chriſt, he hath both the Father and the Son.

10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your houſe, neither bid him God ſpeed.

11 For he that biddeth him God ſpeed, is partaker of his evil deeds.

12 Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I truſt to come unto you, and ſpeak face to face, that our joy may be full.

13 The children of thy elect ſiſter greet thee. Amen.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

THIRD EPISTLE

OF

JOHN.

The INTRODUCTION.

This third Epiſtle was wrote to one Gaius a Chriſtian, who was a kind friend and courteous entertainer of the diſtreſſed Brethren, or Chriſtians, who were ſtrangers, eſpecially thoſe, who went forth to publiſh the Goſpel among the Gentiles, and would take nothing of them; ver. 7. and therefore were recommended by the Apoſtle to wealthy and charitable Chriſtians; ver. 6.

The Apoſtle encourages him in the true faith, and to continue that hoſpitality and charity; and as for Diotrephes, who loved to have the pre-eminence himſelf, and would not ſubmit to the Apoſtle, nor receive, nor entertain the Brethren recommended to him, nor eved ſuffer others to do it, the Apoſtle threatens to deal with him accordingly, or remember his deeds (not ſo much for the oppoſition he made to his perſon, as to the progreſs of the Goſpel.) But as for Gaius, he had no more to ſay to him, but that he hoped ſhortly to ſee him.

He commendeth Gaius for his piety, 5 and hoſpitality, 7 to true preachers; 9 complaining of the unkind dealing of ambitious Diotrephes on the contrary ſide, 11 whoſe evil example is not to be followed: 12 and giveth ſpecial teſtimony to the good report of Demetrius.

THE elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth.

2 Beloved, I wiſh above all things that thou mayſt proſper and be in health, even as thy ſoul proſpereth.

3 For I rejoyced greatly when the brethren came and teſtified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkeſt in the truth.

4 I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth.

5 Beloved, thou doſt faithfully whatſoever thou doſt to the brethren, and to ſtrangers;

6 Which have born witneſs of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly ſort, thou ſhalt do well:

7 Becauſe that for his names ſake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles.

8 We therefore ought to receive ſuch, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth.

9 I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not.

10 Wherefore if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doth, prating againſt us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himſelf receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and caſteth them out of the church.

11 Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doth good, is of God: but he that doth evil, hath not ſeen God.

12 Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth it ſelf: yea, and we alſo bear record, and ye know that our record is true.

13 I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee:

14 But I truſt I ſhall ſhortly ſee thee, and we ſhall ſpeak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends ſalute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

GENERAL EPISTLE

OF

JUDE.

The INTRODUCTION.

This Jude was one of the twelve Apoſtles called Lebbæus and Thaddæus, Matt. x. 3. brother to James, who wrote the Epiſtle of James, and ſo, as is conjectured, one of Joſeph's ſons by a former wife, or elſe nearly related to the Virgin Mary.

He wrote this Epiſtle to ſome of the firſt Chriſtians, eſpecially to the Jews, who had been converted to the Chriſtian Faith, and were diſperſed through many countries: And this is the reaſon for its being called a Catholick, general or univerſal Epiſtle; becauſe not ſuperſcribed to any certain or particular congregation of Chriſtians.

His deſign was to encourage them to continue in their holy faith, and to caution them againſt the deceivers and Hereticks, who had crept in among them, on purpoſe to deſtroy the true faith, and were perſons of corrupt and lewd converſations. Therefore,

The Apoſtle (much in the ſame manner as Peter has done before in his ſecond Epiſtle) briefly deſcribes their wretched doctrines and practices, and declares the terrible judgments which would overtake them, who were before of old ordain'd to this condemnation, ver. 4. that is, not made and ordained by God on purpoſe to be puniſhed; but, as the original word προγεγραμμένοι imports, of whom it was before written or propheſied that this ſhould be their condemnation without repentance, as Enoch propheſied of them, ver. 14.

Where note, That the hiſtory of Michael and the Prophecy of Enoch being owned by the Jews, though not in Scripture, the Apoſtle argues with them from their own conceſſions.

He exhorteth them to be conſtant in the profeſſion of the faith. 4 Falſe teachers are crept in to ſeduce them; for whoſe damnable doctrine and manners, horrible puniſhment is prepared: 20 whereas the godly by the aſſiſtance of the holy Spirit, and prayers to God, may perſevere and grow in grace, and keep themſelves, and recovers others out of the ſnares of thoſe deceivers.

JUDE the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, and brother of James, to them that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and called:

2 Mercy unto you, and peace, and love be multiplied.

3 Beloved when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common ſalvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye ſhould earneſtly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the ſaints.

4 For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into laſciviouſneſs, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

5 I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord having ſaved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward deſtroyed them that believed not.

6 And the angels which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the judgment of the great day.

7 Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner giving themſelves over to fornication, and going after ſtrange fleſh, are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8 Likewiſe alſo theſe filthy dreamers defile the fleſh, deſpiſe dominion, and ſpeak evil of dignities.

9 Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, he diſputed about the body of Moſes, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, but ſaid, The Lord rebuke thee.

10 But theſe ſpeak evil of thoſe things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beaſts; in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves.

11 Wo unto them; for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and periſhed in the gainſaying of Core.

12 Theſe are ſpots in your feaſts of charity, when they feaſt with you, feeding themſelves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees, whoſe fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots;

13 Raging waves of the ſea, foaming out their own ſhame; wandring ſtars, to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever.

14 And Enoch alſo, the ſeventh from Adam, propheſied of theſe, ſaying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thouſands of his ſaints;

15 To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him.

16 Theſe are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own luſts; and their mouth ſpeaketh great ſwelling words, having mens perſons in admiration becauſe of advantage.

17 But, beloved, remember ye the words which were ſpoken before of the apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

18 How that they told you there ſhould be mockers in the laſt time, who ſhould walk after their own ungodly luſts.

19 Theſe be they who ſeparate themſelves, ſenſual, having not the Spirit.

20 But ye, beloved, building up your ſelves on your moſt holy faith, praying in the holy Ghoſt,

21 Keep your ſelves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternal life.

22 And of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference:

23 And others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh.

24 Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to preſent you faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy,

25 To the only wiſe God our Saviour, be glory and majeſty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE REVELATION

OF

St. JOHN the Divine.

The INTRODUCTION.

This John was one of the twelve Apoſtles, and the ſame who wrote the Goſpel, and the three Epiſtles of John, he was called the Divine, (as is juſtly conceived) by reaſon of his writings, eſpecially the Goſpel; which ſets forth the Divine Nature of Chriſt, or as he is God; whereas the other Goſpels begin the account of him, as he was man, and born in the world. This book was written by him in the iſle of Patmos, whither he was baniſhed; chap. i. 9.

As for the time when this book was written; ſee the notes on chap. i. ver. 1. The firſt three chapters contain the meſſage which God in a viſion, commanded John to ſend to the ſeven churches of Aſia, repreſented by golden candleſticks, and to the particular biſhops of each Church, repreſented by ſtars, and called angels, probably in alluſion to the Jewiſh church, the prieſts whereof were ſtiled angels, or meſſengers, Mal. ii. 7. as bringing the commands of God to the people, and carrying, or offering their prayers to God; or elſe from the ruler of the ſynagogue, whoſe office was to order the prayers and reading in the ſynagogue, and called angel, or biſhop.

The ſeven Churches were at Epheſus, Smyrna, Pergamus, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea; all which were eminent cities in the Leſſer Aſia. The deſign of theſe meſſages was to acquaint them with the notice God took of the behaviour of every one of them, to encourage them in what was good, and reprove them for what was amiſs, to caution them againſt falſe teachers and ſeducers, and to comfort them in their ſufferings, leſt they ſhould, through fear, caſt off their holy profeſſion; aſſuring them, that God would not fail to reward and crown all thoſe, who perſevered in his holy faith and ſervice with eternal glory.

In chap. ii. God is ſaid, at ver. 6. to hate the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, who allowed themſelves to commit adultery or fornication, on pretence of encouragement from Nicolas the deacon; who being ſuſpected of jealouſy, ran into the extreme of permitting his wife to marry whom ſhe would, that he might clear himſelf of that imputation; ſee Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. lib. iii. cap. 29.

The other parts of the Revelations contain ſeveral Prophecies concerning the ſtate and condition of the Chriſtian Church from the beginning, and the rage of the Devil and his inſtruments againſt it, likewiſe concerning the ſufferings and martyrdoms of many; the ruin and deſtruction of all their enemies; and at laſt, the glorious triumph and joys of all the holy members of Chriſt's Church; ſee the notes and Dr. Wells's paraphraſe, and Sir Iſaac Newton's Obſervations on this Book.

CHAP. I.

4 John writeth his revelation to the ſeven churches of Aſia, ſignified by the ſeven golden candleſticks. 7 The coming of Chriſt: 14 His glorious power and majeſty.

THE revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, to ſhew unto his ſervants things which muſt ſhortly come to paſs; and he ſent and ſignified it by his angel unto his ſervant John:

2 Who bare record of the word of God, and of the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, and of all things that he ſaw.

3 Bleſſed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this propheſy, and keep thoſe things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

4 JOHN to the ſeven churches which are in Aſia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the ſeven ſpirits which are before his throne;

5 And from Jeſus Chriſt, who is the faithful witneſs, and the firſt-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth: unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood,

6 And hath made us kings and prieſts unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth ſhall wail becauſe of him: even ſo, Amen.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, ſaith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

9 I John, who alſo am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jeſus Chriſt, was in the iſle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt.

10 I was in the ſpirit on the Lords day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet.

11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt: and, What thou ſeeſt, write in a book, and ſend it unto the ſeven churches which are in Aſia; unto Epheſus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

12 And I turned to ſee the voice that ſpake with me. And being turned, I ſaw ſeven golden candleſticks;

13 And in the midſt of the ſeven candleſticks, one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14 His head and his hairs were white like wooll, as white as ſnow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15 And his feet like unto fine braſs, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the ſound of many waters.

16 And he had in his right hand ſeven ſtars: and out of his mouth went a ſharp two-edged ſword: and his countenance was as the ſun ſhineth in his ſtrength.

17 And when I ſaw him, I fell at his feet as dead: and he laid his right hand upon me, ſaying unto me, Fear not, I am the firſt and the laſt:

18 I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19 Write the things which thou haſt ſeen, and the things which are, and the things which ſhall be hereafter,

20 The myſtery of the ſeven ſtars which thou ſaweſt in my right hand, and the ſeven golden candleſticks. The ſeven ſtars are the angels of the ſeven churches: and the ſeven candleſticks which thou ſaweſt, are the ſeven churches.

Ver. 1. The revelation, &c] Epiphanius repreſents the Goſpel of John as written in the time of Domitian, and the Apocalypſe or Revelation even before that of Nero. Arethas affirms the Apocalypſe was written before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and that former commentators had expounded the ſixth ſeal of that deſtruction, ch. xiii. 19.

With the opinion of the firſt commentators agrees the tradition of the Churches of Syria, preſerved to this day in the title of the Syriac Verſion of the Apocalypſe, which title is this: The Revelation which was made to John the Evangeliſt by God in the iſland Patmos, into which he was baniſhed by Nero the Ceſar. The ſame is confirmed by a ſtory told by Euſebius out of Clemens Alexandrinus, and other antient authors, concerning a youth, whom John ſome time after his return from Patmos committed to the care of the Biſhop of a certain city; (ſee Euſeb. hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 23. and the Introduction to John's Goſpel.) Which is a ſtory of many years, and requires that John ſhould have returned from Patmos rather at the death of Nero, than at that of Domitian; becauſe between the death of Domitian and that of John there were but two years and an half; and John in his old age was ſo infirm, ſays Hierom. in Epiſt. ad Gal. l. 3. c. 6. as to be carried to Church, dying above ninety years old, and therefore could not be then ſuppoſed able to ride after the young thief, there deſcribed.

This opinion is further ſupported by the alluſions in the Revelation to the temple and altar, and holy city, as then ſtanding; and to the Gentiles, who were ſoon after to tread under foot the holy city and outward court. 'Tis confirmed alſo by the ſtyle of the Revelation itſelf, which is fuller of Hebraiſms than his Goſpel. For thence it may be gathered, that it was written when John was newly come out of Judea, where he had been uſed to the Syriac tongue; and that he did not write his Goſpel, till by long converſe with the Aſiatick Greeks he had left off moſt of the Hebraiſms. It is confirmed alſo by the many falſe Revelations, as thoſe of Peter, Paul, Thomas, Stephen, Elias and Cerinthus, written in imitation of the true one. For as the many falſe goſpels, falſe acts, and falſe epiſtles were occaſioned by true ones; and the writing many falſe Revelations, and aſcribing them to Apoſtles and Prophets, argues that there was a true Apoſtolic one in great requeſt with the firſt Chriſtians: So this true one may well be ſuppoſed to have been written early, that there may be room in the Apoſtolic age for the writing of ſo many falſe ones afterwards, and fathering them upon Peter, Paul, Thomas and others, who were dead before John.

Caius, who was contemporary with Tertullian, tells us, Apud Euſeb. Eccl. hiſt. l. 3. c. 28. Edit. Valeſii. that Cerinthus wrote his Revelations as a great Apoſtle, and pretended the viſions were ſhewn him by Angels, aſſerting a millennium, or a thouſand years continuance of carnal pleaſures at Jeruſalem after the reſurrection; ſo that his Revelation was plainly written in imitation of John's: And yet he lived ſo early, that he, according to Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 28. reſiſted the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem in or before the firſt year of Claudius, that is, twenty-ſix years before the death of Nero, and died before John; ſee Hieron. adv. Lucif.

Theſe reaſons may ſuffice for determining the time; and yet there is one more, which to conſidering men may ſeem a good reaſon, to others not. I'll propound it, and leave it to every man's judgment. The Revelation ſeems to be alluded to in the Epiſtles of Peter and that to the Hebrews: And therefore to have been written before them. Such alluſions in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, I take to be the diſcourſes concerning the high-prieſt in the heavenly tabernacle, who is both prieſt and king, as was Melchiſedec; and thoſe concerning the word of God, with the ſharp two-edged ſword, the σαββατισμός, or millennial reſt, the earth whoſe end is to be burned, ſuppoſe by the lake of fire, the judgment and fiery indignation which ſhall devour the adverſaries, the heavenly city which hath foundations whoſe builder and maker is God, the cloud of witneſſes, mount Sion, heavenly Jeruſalem, general aſſembly, ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, viz. by the reſurrection, and the ſhaking of Heaven and earth, and removing them, that the new Heaven, new earth and new kingdom which cannot be ſhaken, may remain. In the firſt of Peter occur theſe; ſee Pet. i. 7, 13. iv. 13. and v. 1. The Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, twice or thrice repeated; ſee Revel. xiii. 8. the blood of Chriſt as of a lamb fore-ordained before the foundation of the world; ſee Revel. xxi. the ſpiritual building in Heaven, 1 Pet. ii. 5. an inheritance uncorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reſerved in Heaven for us, who are kept unto the ſalvation, ready to be revealed in the laſt time, 1 Pet. i. 4, 5. in Revel. i. 6. and v. 10. the royal prieſthood ch. xx. 6. the holy prieſthood, the judgment beginning at the houſe of God, ch. xx. 4, 12. and the Church at Babylon, ch. xvii.

Theſe are indeed obſcurer alluſions; but the ſecond Epiſtle, from the nineteenth verſe of the firſt chapter to the end, ſeems to be a continued Commentary upon the Revelation. There, in writing to the Churches in Aſia, to whom John was commanded to ſend his Prophecy, he tells them, they have a more ſure word of Prophecy, to be heeded by them, as a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in their hearts, that is, until they begin to underſtand it: For no Prophecy, ſaith he, of the Scripture is of any private interpretation; the Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God ſpake, as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt. Daniel himſelf profeſſes that he underſtood not his own Prophecies; Dan. viii. 15, 16, 27. and xii. 8, 9. and therefore the Churches were not to expect the interpretation from their Prophet John, but to ſtudy the Prophecies themſelves. This is the ſubſtance of what Peter ſays in the firſt chapter; and then

In the ſecond he proceeds to deſcribe, out of this ſure word of Prophecy, how there ſhould ariſe in the Church falſe prophets, or falſe teachers, expreſſed collectively in the Revelation by the name of the falſe prophet; who ſhould bring in damnable hereſies, even denying the Lord that bought them which is the character of antichriſt: And many, ſaith he, ſhall follow their luſts; they that dwell on the earth (ſee Revel. xiii. 7, 12.) ſhall be deceived by the falſe prophet, and be made drunk with the wine of the whore's fornication, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be blaſphemed; for the beaſt is full of blaſphemy: And through covetouſneſs ſhall they with feigned words make merchandize of you; ſee Revel. xiii. 1, 5, 6. for theſe are the merchants of the earth, who trade with the great whore, and their merchandize is all things of price, with the bodies and ſouls of men; ſee Revel. xviii. 12, 13. Whoſe judgment———lingreth not, and their damnation ſlumbreth not, ſee Revel. xix. 20. but ſhall ſurely come upon them at the laſt day ſuddenly, as the flood upon the old world, and fire and brimſtone upon Sodom and Gomorrha, when the juſt ſhall be delivered like Lot; ſee Revel. xxi. 3, 4. for the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed, in the lake of fire; but chiefly them that walk after the fleſh in the luſt of uncleanneſs, being made drunk with the wine of the whore's fornication; ſee Revel. ix. 21. and xvii. 2. who deſpiſe dominion, and are not afraid to blaſpheme glories; for the beaſt opened his mouth againſt God to blaſpheme his name and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in Heaven; ſee Revel. xiii. 6. Theſe, as natural brute beaſts, the ten-horned beaſt and two-horned beaſt, or falſe prophet, made to be taken and deſtroyed, in the lake of fire, blaſpheme the things they underſtand not:———They count it pleaſure to riot in the day-time——ſporting themſelves with their own deceivings, while they feaſt with you, having eyes full of an adultereſs; ſee Revel. xviii. 3, 7, 9. μοιχαλίδος. For the kingdoms of the beaſt live deliciouſly with the great whore, and the nations are made drunk with the wine of her fornication. They are gone aſtray, following the way of Balaam, the ſon of Beor, who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs, the falſe prophet who taught Balak to caſt a ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael; ſee Revel. ii. 14. Theſe are, not fountains of living water, but wells without water; not ſuch clouds of Saints as the two witneſſes aſcend in, but clouds that are carried with a tempeſt, &c.

Thus does the author of this Epiſtle ſpend all the ſecond chapter in deſcribing the qualities of the Apocalyptic beaſts and falſe prophet: And then in the third he goes on to deſcribe their deſtruction more fully, and the future kingdom. He ſaith, that becauſe the coming of Chriſt ſhould be long deferred, they ſhould ſcoff, ſaying, where is the promiſe of his coming? Then he deſcribes the ſudden coming of the day of the Lord upon them, as a thief in the night, which is the Apocaliptic phraſe; and the millennium, or thouſand years, which are with God but as a day; the paſſing away of the old heavens and earth, by a conflagration in the lake of fire, and our looking for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs.

Seeing therefore Peter and John were Apoſtles of the circumciſion, it ſeems to me that they ſtaid with their Churches in Judea and Syria till the Romans made war upon their nation, that is, till the twelfth year of Nero; that they then followed the main body of their flying Churches into Aſia, and that Peter went thence by Corinth to Rome; that the Roman empire looked upon thoſe Churches as enemies, becauſe Jews by birth; and therefore to prevent inſurrections, ſecured their leaders, and baniſhed John into Patmos. It ſeems alſo probable to me, that the Revelation was there compoſed, and that ſoon after the Epiſtle to the Hebrews and thoſe of Peter were written to theſe Churches, with reference to this Prophecy as what they were particularly concerned in. For it appears by theſe Epiſtles, that they were written in times of general affliction and tribulation under the heathens, and by conſequence when the empire made war upon the Jews; for till then the Heathens were at peace with the Chriſtian Jews, as well as with the reſt. The Epiſtle to the Hebrews, ſince it mentions Timothy as related to thoſe Hebrews, muſt be written to them after their flight into Aſia, where Timothy was biſhop; and by conſequence after the war began, the Hebrews in Judea being ſtrangers to Timothy. Peter ſeems alſo to call Rome Babylon, as well with reſpect to the war made upon Judea, and the approaching captivity, like that under old Babylon, as with reſpect to that name in the Revelation; and in writing to the ſtrangers ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia and Bithynia, he ſeems to intimate that they were the ſtrangers newly ſcattered by the Roman wars; for thoſe were the only ſtrangers there belonging to his care.

This Prophecy is caled the Revelation, with reſpect to the Scripture of truth, which Daniel was commanded to ſhut up and ſeal till the time of the end; Dan. x. 21. xii. 4,—9. Daniel ſealed it until the time of the end; and until that time comes, the Lamb is opening the ſeals; and afterwards the two witneſſes propheſy out of it a long time in ſackcloth, before they aſcend up to Heaven in a cloud. All which is as much as to ſay, that theſe Prophecies of Daniel and John ſhould not be underſtood till the time of the end: But then ſome ſhould propheſy out of them in an afflicted and mournful ſtate for a long time, and that but darkly, ſo as to convert but few. But in the very end, the Prophecy ſhould be ſo far interpreted as to convince many. Then, ſaith Daniel, many ſhall run to and fro, and knowledge ſhall be encreaſed. For the Goſpel muſt be preached in all nations before the great tribulation, and end of the world.

The palm-bearing multitude, which come out of this great tribulation, cannot be innumerable out of all nations, unleſs they be made ſo by the preaching of the Goſpel before it comes. There muſt be a ſtone cut out of a mountain without hands, before it can fall upon the toes of the image, and become a great mountain and fill the earth. An angel muſt fly through the midſt of Heaven with the everlaſting Goſpel to preach to all nations, before Babylon falls, and the Son of man reaps his harveſt. The two Prophets muſt aſcend up to Heaven in a cloud, before the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of Chriſt. It is therefore a part of this Prophecy, that it ſhould not be underſtood before the laſt age of the world; and therefore it makes for the credit of the Prophecy, that it is not yet underſtood. But if the laſt age, the age of opening theſe things, be now approaching, as by the great ſucceſſes of late interpreters it ſeems to be, we have more encouragement than ever to look into theſe things. If the general preaching of the Goſpel be approaching, it is to us and our poſterity that thoſe words mainly belong: In the time of the end the wiſe ſhall underſtand, but none of the wicked ſhall underſtand. Bleſſed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep thoſe things which are written therein; compare Dan. xii. 4,—10. with Revel. i. 3.

The folly of interpreters has been, to foretel times and things by this Prophecy, as if God deſigned to make them Prophets. By this raſhneſs they have not only expoſed themſelves, but brought the Prophecy alſo into contempt. The deſign of God was much otherwiſe. He gave this and the Prophecies of the Old Teſtament, not to gratify mens curioſities by enabling them to foreknow things, but that after they were fulfilled they might be interpreted by the event, and his own Providence, not the interpreters, be then manifeſted thereby to the world. For the event of things predicted many ages before, will then be a convincing argument that the world is governed by Providence. For as the few and obſcure Prophecies concerning Chriſt's firſt coming were for ſetting up the Chriſtian religion, which all nations have ſince corrupted; ſo the many and clear Prophecies concerning the things to be done at Chriſt's ſecond coming, are not only for predicting, but alſo for effecting a recovery and re-eſtabliſhment of the long loſt truth, and ſetting up a kingdom, wherein dwells righteouſneſs. The event will prove the Revelation; and this Prophecy, thus proved and underſtood, will open the old Prophets, and all together will make known the true religion, and eſtabliſh it. For he that will underſtand the old Prophets, muſt begin with this; but the time is not yet come for underſtanding them perfectly, becauſe the main revolution predicted in them is not yet come to paſs. In the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, when he ſhall begin to ſound, the myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed, as he hath declared to his ſervants the Prophets: and then the kingdoms of this world ſhall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever; Apoc. x. 7. xi. 15. There is already ſo much of the Prophecy fulfilled, that as many as will take pains in this ſtudy, may ſee ſufficient inſtances of God's Providence: But then the ſignal revolutions predicted by all the holy Prophets, will at once both turn mens eyes upon conſidering the predictions, and plainly interpret them. And till then we muſt content ourſelves with interpreting what has been already fulfilled.

Ver. 6.——Kings and prieſts unto God, &c.] Or in the kingdom of God.

Ver. 18. I am Alpha and Omega] i. e. The beginning and the ending. For Alpha is the firſt letter, and Omega the name of the laſt letter in the Greek alphabet, and are therefore uſed in this place figuratively to ſhew that as ſure as thoſe two letters are univerſally received to begin and end the Greek alphabet; ſo certainly Chriſt our Saviour muſt be acknowledged to be the author and finiſher of our faith.

Ver. 10. I was in the ſpirit.] Or, in a viſion of God's Holy Spirit.

— On the Lord's day] See my Diſſertation on the Lord's Day, in 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

Ver. 12.——Golden candleſticks.] See ver. 20.

CHAP. II.

What is commanded to be written to the angels (that is, the miniſters) of the Churches of 1 Epheſus, 8 Smyrna, 12 Pergamos, 18 Thyatira: and what is commended, or found wanting in them.

UNTO the angel of the church of Epheſus, write, Theſe things ſaith he that holdeth the ſeven ſtars in his right hand, who walketh in the midſt of the ſeven candleſticks;

2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canſt not bear them which are evil: and thou haſt tried them which ſay they are apoſtles, and are not; and haſt found them lyers:

3 And haſt born, and haſt patience, and for my names ſake haſt laboured, and haſt not fainted.

4 Neverthelеſs, I have ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I alſo hate.

7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches, To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midſt of the paradiſe of God.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna, write, Theſe things ſaith the firſt and the laſt, which was dead, and is alive;

9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty (but thou art rich) and I know the blaſphemy of them which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but are the ſynagogue of Satan.

10 Fear none of thoſe things which thou ſhalt ſuffer: behold, the devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon, that ye may be tried; and ye ſhall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches, He that overcometh ſhall not be hurt of the ſecond death.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos, write, Theſe things, ſaith he, which hath the ſharp ſword with two edges.

13 I know thy works, and where thou dwelleſt, even where Satans ſeat is: and thou holdeſt faſt my name, and haſt not denied my faith, even in thoſe days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was ſlain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

14 But I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to caſt a ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael, to eat things ſacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.

15 So haſt thou alſo them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

16 Repent; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight againſt them with the ſword of my mouth.

17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches, To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white ſtone, and in the ſtone a new name written, which no man knoweth, ſaving he that receiveth it.

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira, write, Theſe things ſaith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine braſs;

19 I know thy works, and charity, and ſervice, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the laſt to be more than the firſt.

20 Notwithſtanding, I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou ſuffereſt that woman Jezabel, which calleth her ſelf a propheteſs, to teach and to ſeduce my ſervants to commit fornication, and to eat things ſacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her ſpace to repent of her fornication, and ſhe repented not.

22 Behold, I will caſt her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches ſhall know that I am he that ſearcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24 But unto you I ſay, and unto the reſt in Thyatira, As many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they ſpeak, I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But that which ye have already, hold faſt till I come.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

27 (And he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron: as the veſſels of a potter ſhall they be broken to ſhivers) even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him the morning ſtar.

29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches.

Ver. 1.——— Seven ſtars.] See chap. i. ver. 20.

N. B. See the connection of theſe Prophecies at the end of the book.

CHAP. III.

2 The angel of the church of Sardis is reproved, 3 exhorted to repent, and threatned if he do not repent. 8 The angel of the church of Philadelphia, 10 is approved for his diligence and patience. 15 The angel of Laodicea is rebuked for being neither hot nor cold, 19 and admoniſhed to be more zealous. 20 Chriſt ſtandeth at the door, and knocketh.

AND unto the angel of the church in Sardis, write, Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven ſtars; I know thy works, that thou haſt a name that thou liveſt, and art dead.

2 Be watchful, and ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 Remember therefore how thou haſt received, and heard, and hold faſt, and repent. If therefore thou ſhalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou ſhalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou haſt a few names even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; and they ſhall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

5 He that overcometh, the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confeſs his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, write, Theſe things ſaith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man ſhutteth; and ſhutteth, and no man openeth:

8 I know thy works: behold, I have ſet before thee an open door, and no man can ſhut it: for thou haſt a little ſtrength, and haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will make them of the ſynagogue of Satan (which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but do lie) behold, I will make them to come and worſhip before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10 Becauſe thou haſt kept the word of my patience, I alſo will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which ſhall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that faſt which thou haſt, that no man take thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he ſhall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jeruſalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches.

14 And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans, write, Theſe things ſaith the Amen, the faithful and true witneſs, the beginning of the creation of God;

15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

16 So then, becauſe thou art luke-warm, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth:

17 Becauſe thou ſayeſt, I am rich, and increaſed with goods, and have need of nothing; and knoweſt not that thou art wretched, and miſerable, aud poor, and blind, and naked.

18 I counſel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayſt be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayſt be clothed, and that the ſhame of thy nakedneſs do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-ſalve, that thou mayſt ſee.

19 As many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten: be zealous therefore and repent.

20 Behold, I ſtand at the door and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and he with me.

21 To him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with my Father in his throne.

22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches.

CHAP. IV.

2 John ſeeth the throne of God in heaven. 4 The four and twenty elders. 6 The four beaſts full of eyes before and behind. 10 The elders lay down their crowns, and worſhip him that ſat on the throne.

AFter this, I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the firſt voice which I heard, was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which ſaid, Come up hither, and I will ſhew thee things which muſt be hereafter.

2 And immediately I was in the ſpirit: and behold, a throne was ſet in heaven, and one ſat on the throne.

3 And he that ſat, was to look upon like a jaſper, and a ſardine ſtone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in ſight like unto an emerald.

4 And round about the throne were four and twenty ſeats: and upon the ſeats I ſaw four and twenty elders ſitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

5 And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thundrings, and voices: And there were ſeven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the ſeven Spirits of God.

6 And before the throne there was a ſea of glaſs, like unto cryſtal: And in the midſt of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beaſts full of eyes, before and behind.

7 And the firſt beaſt was like a lion, and the ſecond beaſt like a calf, and the third beaſt had a face as a man, and the fourth beaſt was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four beaſts had each of them ſix wings about him, and they were full of eyes within; and they reſt not day and night, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

9 And when thoſe beaſts give glory, and honour, and thanks to him that ſat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever.

10 The four and twenty elders fall down before him that ſat on the throne, and worſhip him that liveth for ever and ever, and caſt their crowns before the throne, ſaying,

11 Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour, and power: for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and were created.

CHAP. V.

1 The book ſealed with ſeven ſeals: 9 which only the Lamb that was ſlain is worthy to open; 12 Therefore the elders praiſe him, 9 and confeſs that he redeemed them with his blood.

AND I ſaw in the right hand of him that ſat on the throne, a book written within and on the backſide, ſealed with ſeven ſeals.

2 And I ſaw a ſtrong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to looſe the ſeals thereof?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much, becauſe no man was found worthy to open, and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders ſaith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to looſe the ſeven ſeals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and lo, in the midſt of the throne, and of the four beaſts, and in the midſt of the elders ſtood a Lamb, as it had been ſlain, having ſeven horns, and ſeven eyes, which are the ſeven Spirits of God ſent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that ſat upon the throne.

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beaſts, and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of ſaints.

9 And they ſung a new ſong, ſaying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the ſeals thereof; for thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and nation;

10 And haſt made us unto our God, kings and prieſts: and we ſhall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beaſts, and the elders: and the number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands.

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and ſuch as are in the ſea, and all that are in them, heard I, ſaying, Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14 And the four beaſts ſaid, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worſhipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

1 The opening of the ſeals in order, and what followed thereupon; containing a propheſy to the end of the world.

AND I ſaw, when the Lamb opened one of the ſeals, and I heard as it were the noiſe of thunder, one of the four beaſts ſaying, Come, and ſee.

2 And I ſaw, and behold, a white horſe; and he that ſat on him had a bow, and a crown was given unto him, and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

3 And when he had opened the ſecond ſeal, I heard the ſecond beaſt ſay, Come, and ſee.

4 And there went out another horſe that was red: and power was given to him that ſat thereon, to take peace from the earth, and that they ſhould kill one another: and there was given unto him a great ſword.

5 And when he had opened the third ſeal, I heard the third beaſt ſay, Come, and ſee. And I beheld, and lo, a black horſe; and he that ſat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midſt of the four beaſts ſay, A meaſure of wheat for a peny; and three meaſures of barley for a peny; and ſee thou hurt not the oyl and the wine.

7 And when he had opened the fourth ſeal, I heard the voice of the fourth beaſt ſay, Come, and ſee.

8 And I looked, and behold, a pale horſe; and his name that ſat on him was Death, and hell followed with him: and power was given unto them, over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with ſword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beaſts of the earth.

9 And when he had opened the fifth ſeal, I ſaw under the altar the ſouls of them that were ſlain for the word of God, and for the teſtimony which they held.

10 And they cried with a loud voice, ſaying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, doſt thou not judge and avenge our blood, on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And white robes were given unto every one of them, and it was ſaid unto them, that they ſhould reſt yet for a little ſeaſon, until their fellow-ſervants alſo, and their brethren that ſhould be killed as they were, ſhould be fulfilled.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the ſixth ſeal, and lo, there was a great earthquake, and the ſun became black as ſackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 And the ſtars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree caſteth her untimely figs, when ſhe is ſhaken of a mighty wind:

14 And the heaven departed as a ſcrowl when it is rolled together; and every mountain and iſland were moved out of their places:

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man hid themſelves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 And ſaid to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

17 For the great day of his wrath is come; and who ſhall be able to ſtand?

CHAP. VII.

3 An angel ſealeth the ſervants of God in their foreheads: 4 The number of them that were ſealed: of the tribes of Iſrael a certain number, 9 of all other nations an innumerable multitude, which ſtand before the throne, clad in white robes, and palms in their hands: 14 Their robes were waſhed in the blood of the Lamb.

AND after theſe things, I ſaw four angels ſtanding on the four winds of the earth, holding the four corners of the earth, that the wind ſhould not blow on the earth, nor on the ſea, nor on any tree.

2 And I ſaw another angel aſcending from the eaſt, having the ſeal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the ſea,

3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the ſea, nor the trees, till we have ſealed the ſervants of our God in their foreheads.

4 And I heard the number of them which were ſealed: and there were ſealed an hundred and forty and four thouſand, of all the tribes of the children of Iſrael.

5 Of the tribe of Juda were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Reuben were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Gad were ſealed twelve thouſand.

6 Of the tribe of Aſer were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Manaſſes were ſealed twelve thouſand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Levi were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Iſachar were ſealed twelve thouſand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Joſeph were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were ſealed twelve thouſand.

9 After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, ſtood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Salvation to our God which ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

11 And all the angels ſtood round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four beaſts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worſhipped God.

12 Saying, Amen: Bleſſing, and glory, and wiſdom, and thankſgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

13 And one of the elders anſwered, ſaying unto me, What are theſe which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?

14 And I ſaid unto him, Sir, thou knoweſt. And he ſaid to me, Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and ſerve him day and night in his temple: and he that ſitteth on the throne ſhall dwell among them.

16 They ſhall hunger no more, neither thirſt any more, neither ſhall the ſun light on them, nor any heat.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midſt of the throne, ſhall feed them, and ſhall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

CHAP. VIII.

1 At the opening of the ſeventh ſeal, 2 ſeven angels had ſeven trumpets given them: 6 Four of them ſound their trumpets, and great plagues follow. 3 Another angel putteth incenſe to the prayers of the Saints on the golden altar.

AND when he had opened the ſeventh ſeal, there was great ſilence in heaven about the ſpace of half an hour.

2 And I ſaw the ſeven angels which ſtood before God; and to them were given ſeven trumpets.

3 And another angel came and ſtood at the altar, having a golden cenſer; and there was given unto him much incenſe, that he ſhould offer it with the prayers of all ſaints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.

4 And the ſmoke of the incenſe which came with the prayers of the ſaints aſcended up before God, out of the angels hands.

5 And the angel took the cenſer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and caſt it into the earth: and there were voices, and thundrings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.

6 And the ſeven angels which had the ſeven trumpets, prepared themſelves to ſound.

7 The firſt angel ſounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were caſt upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green graſs was burnt up.

8 And the ſecond angel ſounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was caſt into the ſea; and the third part of the ſea became blood:

9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the ſea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ſhips were deſtroyed.

10 And the third angel ſounded, and there fell a great ſtar from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters:

11 And the name of the ſtar is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, becauſe they were made bitter.

12 And the fourth angel ſounded, and the third part of the ſun was ſmitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the ſtars; ſo as the third part of them was darkned, and the day ſhone not for a third part of it, and the night likewiſe.

13 And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midſt of heaven, ſaying with a loud voice, Wo, wo, wo to the inhabiters of the earth, by reaſon of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels which are yet to ſound.

CHAP. IX.

1 At the ſounding of the fifth angel, a ſtar falleth from heaven, to whom is given the key of the bottomleſs pit: 2 He openeth the pit, and there come forth locuſts like ſcorpions. 12 The firſt wo paſt. 13 The ſixth trumpet ſoundeth. 14 Four angels are let looſe, that were bound.

AND the fifth angel ſounded, and I ſaw a ſtar fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomleſs pit.

2 And he opened the bottomleſs pit, and there aroſe a ſmoke out of the pit, as the ſmoke of a great furnace; and the ſun and the air were darkned, by reaſon of the ſmoke of the pit.

3 And there came out of the ſmoke locuſts upon the earth; and unto them was given power, as the ſcorpions of the earth have power.

4 And it was commanded them that they ſhould not hurt the graſs of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only thoſe men which have not the ſeal of God in their foreheads.

5 And to them it was given that they ſhould not kill them, but that they ſhould be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a ſcorpion, when he ſtriketh a man.

6 And in thoſe days ſhall men ſeek death, and ſhall not find it; and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them.

7 And the ſhapes of the locuſts were like unto horſes prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breaſt-plates, as it were breaſt-plates of iron; and the ſound of their wings was as the ſound of chariots of many horſes running to battle.

10 And they had tails like unto ſcorpions, and there were ſtings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomleſs pit, whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

12 One wo is paſt, and behold there come two woes more hereafter.

13 And the ſixth angel ſounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar, which is before God,

14 Saying to the ſixth angel which had the trumpet, Looſe the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

15 And the four angels were looſed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to ſlay the third part of men.

16 And the number of the army of the horſemen were two hundred thouſand thouſand: and I heard the number of them.

17 And thus I ſaw the horſes in the viſion, and them that ſat on them having breaſt-plates of fire, and of jacinct, and brimſtone: and the heads of the horſes were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths iſſued fire, and ſmoke, and brimſtone.

18 By theſe three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the ſmoke, and by the brimſtone, which iſſued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto ſerpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

20 And the reſt of the men which were not killed by theſe plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they ſhould not worſhip devils, and idols of gold and ſilver, and braſs, and ſtone, and of wood: which neither can ſee, nor hear, nor walk:

21 Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their ſorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

1 A mighty ſtrong angel appeareth with a book open in his hand: 6 He ſweareth by him that liveth for ever, that there ſhall be no more time. 9 John is commmanded to take and eat the book.

AND I ſaw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the ſun, and his feet as pillars of fire.

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: and he ſet his right foot upon the ſea, and his left foot on the earth.

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roreth: and when he had cried, ſeven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the ſeven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write; and I heard a voice from heaven, ſaying unto me, Seal up thoſe things which the ſeven thunders uttered, and write them not.

5 And the angel which I ſaw ſtand upon the ſea, and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven and the things that therein are, and the earth and the things that therein are, and the ſea and the things which are therein, that there ſhould be time no longer:

7 But in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, when he ſhall begin to ſound, the myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed, as he hath declared to his ſervants the prophets.

8 And the voice which I heard from heaven ſpake unto me again, and ſaid, Go, and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which ſtandeth upon the ſea, and upon the earth.

9 And I went unto the angel, and ſaid unto him, Give me the little book. And he ſaid unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it ſhall make thy belly bitter, but it ſhall be in thy mouth ſweet as hony.

10 And I took the little book out of the angels hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth ſweet as hony: and aſſoon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.

11 And he ſaid unto me, Thou muſt propheſy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

CHAP. XI.

3 The two witneſſes propheſy: 6 They have power to ſhut heaven that it rain not: 7 The beaſt ſhall fight againſt them, and kill them: 8 They lie unburied, 11 and after three days and an half riſe again. 14 The ſecond wo is paſt. 15 The ſeventh trumpet ſoundeth.

AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel ſtood, ſaying, Riſe, and meaſure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worſhip therein.

2 But the court which is without the temple leave out, and meaſure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city ſhall they tread under foot forty and two months.

3 And I will give power unto my two witneſſes, and they ſhall propheſy a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days clothed in ſackcloth.

4 Theſe are the two olive-trees, and the two candleſticks ſtanding before the God of the earth.

5 And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he muſt in this manner be killed.

6 Theſe have power to ſhut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters, to turn them to blood, and to ſmite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

7 And when they ſhall have finiſhed their teſtimony, the beaſt that aſcendeth out of the bottomleſs pit, ſhall make war againſt them, and ſhall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies ſhall lie in the ſtreet of the great city, which ſpiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where alſo our Lord was crucified.

9 And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, ſhall ſee their dead bodies three days and an half, and ſhall not ſuffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 And they that dwell upon the earth ſhall rejoyce over them, and make merry, and ſhall ſend gifts one to another; becauſe theſe two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.

11 And after three days and an half, the ſpirit of life from God entred into them: and they ſtood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which ſaw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven, ſaying unto them, Come up hither. And they aſcended up to heaven in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them.

13 And the ſame hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake was ſlain of men ſeven thouſand: and the remnant were afſrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 The ſecond wo is paſt, and behold, the third wo cometh quickly.

15 And the ſeventh angel ſounded, and there were great voices in heaven, ſaying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever.

16 And the four and twenty elders which ſat before God on their ſeats, fell upon their faces and worſhipped God,

17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God almighty, which art, and waſt, and art to come; becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy great power, and haſt reigned.

18 And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they ſhould be judged, and that thou ſhouldſt give reward unto thy ſervants the prophets, and to the ſaints, and them that fear thy name, ſmall and great, and ſhouldſt deſtroy them which deſtroy the earth.

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was ſeen in his temple the ark of his teſtament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thundrings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

CHAP. XII.

1 A woman clothed with the ſun travaileth: 4 The great red dragon ſtandeth before her, ready to devour her child: 6 When ſhe was delivered ſhe fleeth into the wilderneſs. 7 Michael and his angels fight with the dragon, and prevail. 13 The dragon being caſt down into the earth, perſecuteth the woman.

AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the ſun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve ſtars:

2 And ſhe being with child, cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

3 And there appeared another wonder in heaven, and behold, a great red dragon, having ſeven heads, and ten horns, and ſeven crowns upon his heads.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the ſtars of heaven, and did caſt them to the earth: and the dragon ſtood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child aſſoon as it was born.

5 And ſhe brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

6 And the woman fled into the wilderneſs, where ſhe hath a place prepared of God, that they ſhould feed her there a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days.

7 And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought againſt the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels:

8 And prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in heaven.

9 And the great dragon was caſt out, that old ſerpent, called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was caſt out into the earth, and his angels were caſt out with him.

10 And I heard a loud voice, ſaying in heaven, Now is come ſalvation and ſtrength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Chriſt: for the accuſer of our brethren is caſt down, which accuſed them before our God day and night.

11 And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

12 Therefore rejoyce, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Wo to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the ſea: for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, becauſe he knoweth that he hath but a ſhort time.

13 And when the dragon ſaw that he was caſt unto the earth, he perſecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child.

14 And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that ſhe might fly into the wilderneſs, into her place: where ſhe is nouriſhed for a time and times, and half a time, from the face of the ſerpent.

15 And the ſerpent caſt out of his mouth water as a flood, after the woman, that he might cauſe her to be carried away of the flood.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed up the flood which the dragon caſt out of his mouth.

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her ſeed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt.

CHAP. XIII.

1 A beaſt riſeth out of the ſea with ſeven heads and ten horns, to whom the dragon giveth his power. 11 Another beaſt cometh up out of the earth; 14 cauſeth an image to be made of the former beaſt, 15 and that men ſhould worſhip it, 16 and receive his mark.

AND I ſtood upon the ſand of the ſea, and ſaw a beaſt riſe up out of the ſea, having ſeven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blaſphemy.

2 And the beaſt which I ſaw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his ſeat, and great authority.

3 And I ſaw one of his heads, as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondred after the beaſt.

4 And they worſhipped the dragon which gave power unto the beaſt: and they worſhipped the beaſt, ſaying, Who is like unto the beaſt? who is able to make war with him?

5 And there was given unto him a mouth ſpeaking great things, and bleſphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.

6 And he opened his mouth in blaſphemies againſt God to blaſpheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

7 And it was given unto him to make war with the ſaints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues and nations.

8 And all that dwell upon the earth ſhall worſhip him, whoſe names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world.

9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

10 He that leadeth into captivity, ſhall go into captivity: He that killeth with the ſword, muſt be killed with the ſword. Here is the patience and the faith of the ſaints.

11 And I beheld another beaſt coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he ſpake as a dragon.

12 And he exerciſed all the power of the firſt beaſt before him, and cauſeth the earth, and them which dwell therein, to worſhip the firſt beaſt, whoſe deadly wound was healed.

13 And he doth great wonders ſo that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the ſight of men.

14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of thoſe miracles which he had power to do in the ſight of the beaſt, ſaying to them that dwell on the earth, that they ſhould make an image to the beaſt which had the wound by a ſword, and did live.

15 And he had power to give life unto the image of the beaſt, that the image of the beaſt ſhould both ſpeak, and cauſe that as many as would not worſhip the image of the beaſt, ſhould be killed.

16 And he cauſeth all, both ſmall and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their foreheads:

17 And that no man might buy or ſell, ſave he that had the mark, or the name of the beaſt, or the number of his name.

18 Here is wiſdom. Let him that hath underſtanding count the number of the beaſt: for it is the number of a man; and his number is ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix.

CHAP. XIV.

1 The Lamb ſtanding on mount Sion with his company; 6 an angel preacheth the Goſpel. 8 The fall of Babylon. 15 The harveſt of the world, and putting in of the ſickle. 20 The vintage and wine-preſs of the wrath of God.

AND I looked, and lo, a Lamb ſtood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thouſand, having his Fathers name written in their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps:

3 And they ſung as it were a new ſong before the throne, and before the four beaſts, and the elders: and no man could learn that ſong, but the hundred and forty and four thouſand, which were redeemed from the earth.

4 Theſe are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins: theſe are they which follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth: theſe were redeemed from among men, being the firſt-fruits unto God, and to the Lamb.

5 And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

6 And I ſaw another angel fly in the midſt of heaven, having the everlaſting goſpel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.

7 Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come: and worſhip him that made heaven and earth, and the ſea and the fountains of waters.

8 And there followed another angel, ſaying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, becauſe ſhe made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

9 And the third angel followed them, ſaying with a loud voice, If any man worſhip the beaſt and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The ſame ſhall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture, into the cup of his indignation; and he ſhall be tormented with fire and brimſtone, in the preſence of the holy angels, and in the preſence of the Lamb:

11 And the ſmoke of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no reſt day nor night, who worſhip the beaſt and his image, and whoſoever receiveth the mark of his name.

12 Here is the patience of the ſaints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jeſus.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven, ſaying unto me, Write, Bleſſed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, ſaith the Spirit, that they may reſt from their labours; and their works do follow them.

14 And I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one ſat, like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a ſharp ſickle.

15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that ſat on the cloud, Thruſt in thy ſickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harveſt of the earth is ripe.

16 And he that ſat on the cloud, thruſt in his ſickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he alſo having a ſharp ſickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the ſharp ſickle, ſaying, Thruſt in thy ſharp ſickle, and gather the cluſters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

19 And the angel thruſt in his ſickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and caſt it into the great wine-preſs of the wrath of God.

20 And the wine-preſs was troden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-preſs, even unto the horſe-bridles, by the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs.

CHAP. XV.

1 The ſeven angels with the ſeven laſt plagues. 3 The ſong of them that overcome the beaſt. 7 The ſeven vials full of the wrath of God.

AND I ſaw another ſign in heaven, great and marvellous, ſeven angels having the ſeven laſt plagues, for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

2 And I ſaw as it were a ſea of glaſs mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beaſt, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, ſtand on the ſea of glaſs, having the harps of God.

3 And they ſing the ſong of Moſes the ſervant of God, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, thou king of ſaints.

4 Who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations ſhall come and worſhip before thee, for thy judgments are made manifeſt.

5 And after that I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the teſtimony in heaven was opened:

6 And the ſeven angels came out of the temple, having the ſeven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breaſts girded with golden girdles.

7 And one of the four beaſts gave unto the ſeven angels, ſeven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And the temple was filled with ſmoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the ſeven plagues of the ſeven angels were fulfilled.

CHAP. XVI.

2 The angels pour out of their vials full of wrath. 6 The plagues that follow thereupon. 15 Chriſt cometh as a thief. Bleſſed are they that watch.

AND I heard a great voice out of the temple, ſaying to the ſeven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

2 And the firſt went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noiſom and grievous ſore upon the men which had the mark of the beaſt, and upon them which worſhipped his image.

3 And the ſecond angel poured out his vial upon the ſea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living ſoul died in the ſea.

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angels of the waters ſay, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and waſt, and ſhalt be, becauſe thou haſt judged thus:

6 For they have ſhed the blood of ſaints and prophets, and thou haſt given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar ſay, Even ſo, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the ſun; and power was given unto him to ſcorch men with fire.

9 And men were ſcorched with great heat, and blaſphemed the name of God, which hath power over theſe plagues: and they repented not, to give him glory.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the ſeat of the beaſt; and his kingdom was full of darkneſs, and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

11 And blaſphemed the God of heaven, becauſe of their pains and their ſores, and repented not of their deeds.

12 And the ſixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the eaſt might be prepared.

13 And I ſaw three unclean ſpirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaſt, and out of the mouth of the falſe prophet.

14 For they are the ſpirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

15 Behold, I came as a thief. Bleſſed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, leſt he walk naked, and they ſee his ſhame.

16 And he gathered them together into a place, called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon.

17 And the ſeventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne, ſaying, It is done.

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, ſuch as was not ſince men were upon the earth, ſo mighty an earthquake, and ſo great.

19 And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceneſs of his wrath.

20 And every iſland fled away, and the mountains were not found.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every ſtone about the weight of a talent: and men blaſphemed God, becauſe of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

CHAP. XVII.

3, 4 A woman arayed in purple and ſcarlet, with a golden cup in her hand, ſitteth upon the beaſt, 5 which is great Babylon the mother of all abominations. 9 The interpretations of the ſeven heads, 12 and the ten horns. 14 The victory of the Lamb. 16 The puniſhment of the whore.

AND there came one of the ſeven angels which had the ſeven vials, and talked with me, ſaying unto me, Come hither, I will ſhew unto thee the judgment of the great whore, that ſitteth upon many waters.

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabiters of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

3 So he carried me away in the ſpirit into the wilderneſs; and I ſaw a woman ſit upon a ſcarlet-coloured beaſt, full of names of blaſphemy, having ſeven heads, and ten horns.

4 And the woman was arayed in purple, and ſcarlet-colour, and decked with gold and precious ſtone and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthineſs of her fornication.

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

6 And I ſaw the woman drunken with the blood of the ſaints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jeſus: and when I ſaw her, I wondred with great admiration.

7 And the angel ſaid unto me, Wherefore didſt thou marvel? I will tell thee the myſtery of the woman, and of the beaſt that carrieth her, which hath the ſeven heads and ten horns.

8 The beaſt that thou ſaweſt, was, and is not; and ſhall aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth ſhall wonder (whoſe names were not written in the book of life, from the foundation of the world) when they behold the beaſt that was, and is not, and yet is.

9 And here is the mind which hath wiſdom, The ſeven heads are ſeven mountains, on which the woman ſitteth.

10 And there are ſeven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he muſt continue a ſhort ſpace.

11 And the beaſt that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the ſeven, and goeth into perdition.

12 And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt, are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beaſt.

13 Theſe have one mind, and ſhall give their power and ſtrength unto the beaſt.

14 Theſe ſhall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb ſhall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him, are called and choſen, and faithful.

15 And he ſaid unto me, The waters which thou ſaweſt, where the whore ſitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt, upon the beaſt, theſe ſhall hate the whore, and ſhall make her deſolate, and naked, and ſhall eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire.

17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beaſt, until the words of God ſhall be fulfilled.

18 And the woman which thou ſaweſt, is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

CHAP. XVIII.

2 Babylon is fallen: 4 The people of God commanded to depart out of her: 9 The kings of the earth, 11 with the merchants and mariners, lament over her: 20 The ſaints rejoyce for the judgments of God upon her.

AND after theſe things I ſaw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightned with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a ſtrong voice, ſaying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul ſpirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, ſaying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her ſins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

5 For her ſins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Reward her even as ſhe rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works: in the cup which ſhe hath filled, fill to her double.

7 How much ſhe hath glorified her ſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow give her: for ſhe ſaith in her heart, I ſit a queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow.

8 Therefore ſhall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning, and famine; and ſhe ſhall be utterly burnt with fire: for ſtrong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication, and lived deliciouſly with her, ſhall bewail her, and lament for her, when they ſhall ſee the ſmoke of her burning.

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, ſaying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

11 And the merchants of the earth ſhall weep and mourn over her, for no man buyeth her merchandiſe any more:

12 The merchandiſe of gold and ſilver, and precious ſtones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and ſilk, and ſcarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner veſſels of ivory, and all manner veſſels of moſt precious wood, and of braſs, and iron, and marble.

13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincenſe, and wine, and oyl, and fine flour, and wheat, and beaſts, and ſheep, and horſes, and chariots, and ſlaves, and ſouls of men.

14 And the fruits that thy ſoul luſted after, are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly, are departed from thee, and thou ſhalt find them no more at all.

15 The merchants of theſe things which were made rich by her, ſhall ſtand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping, and wailing,

16 And ſaying, Alas, alas, that great city that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and ſcarlet, and decked with gold, and precious ſtones, and pearls:

17 For in one hour ſo great riches is come to nought. And every ſhip-maſter and all the company in ſhips, and ſailers, and as many as trade by ſea, ſtood afar off,

18 And cried when they ſaw the ſmoke of her burning, ſaying, What city is like unto this great city?

19 And they caſt duſt on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, ſaying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ſhips in the ſea, by reaſon of her coſtlineſs: for in one hour is ſhe made deſolate.

20 Rejoyce over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apoſtles and prophets, for God hath avenged you on her.

21 And a mighty angel took up a ſtone like a great milſtone, and caſt it into the ſea, ſaying, Thus with voilence ſhall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all.

22 And the voice of harpers, and muſicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftſman, of whatſoever craft he be, ſhall be found any more in thee; and the ſound of a milſtone ſhall be heard no more at all in thee;

23 And the light of a candle ſhall ſhine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride ſhall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy ſorceries were all nations deceived:

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of ſaints, and of all that were ſlain upon the earth.

CHAP. XIX.

1 God is praiſed in heaven for judging the great whore, and avenging the blood of his ſaints. 7 The marriage of the Lamb. 10 The angel will not be worſhipped. 17 The fowls called to the great ſlaughter.

AND after theſe things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, ſaying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power unto the Lord our God:

2 For true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his ſervants at her hand.

3 And again they ſaid, Alleluia. And her ſmoke roſe up for ever and ever.

4 And the four and twenty elders, and the four beaſts fell down, and worſhipped God that ſat on the throne, ſaying, Amen; Alleluia.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, ſaying, Praiſe our God, all ye his ſervants, and ye that fear him, both ſmall and great.

6 And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thundrings, ſaying, Alleluia: for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.

7 Let us be glad and rejoyce, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her ſelf ready.

8 And to her was granted, that ſhe ſhould be arayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteouſneſs of ſaints.

9 And he ſaith unto me, Write, Bleſſed are they which are called unto the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb. And he ſaith unto me, Theſe are the true ſayings of God.

10 And I fell at his feet to worſhip him: And he ſaid unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-ſervant, and of thy brethren that have the teſtimony of Jeſus: worſhip God: for the teſtimony of Jeſus is the ſpirit of prophecy.

11 And I ſaw heaven opened, and behold, a white horſe; and he that ſat upon him was called faithful and true, and in righteouſneſs he doth judge and make war.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written that no man knew but he himſelf:

13 And he was clothed with a veſture dipt in blood: and his name is called, The word of God.

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horſes, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15 And out of his mouth goeth a ſharp ſword, that with it he ſhould ſmite the nations: and he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-preſs of the fierceneſs and wrath of almighty God.

16 And he hath on his veſture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LOLD OF LORDS.

17 And I ſaw an angel ſtanding in the ſun; and he cried with a loud voice, ſaying to all the fowls that fly in the midſt of heaven, Come and gather yourſelves together unto the ſupper of the great God;

18 That ye may eat the fleſh of kings, and the fleſh of captains, and the fleſh of mighty men, and the fleſh of horſes, and of them that ſit on them, and the fleſh of all men, both free and bond, both ſmall and great.

19 And I ſaw the beaſt and the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together to make war againſt him that ſat on the horſe, and againſt his army.

20 And the beaſt was taken, and with him the falſe prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beaſt, and them that worſhipped his image. Theſe both were caſt alive into a lake of fire burning with brimſtone.

21 And the remnant were ſlain with the ſword of him that ſat upon the horſe, which ſword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their fleſh.

CHAP. XX.

2 Satan bound for a thouſand years. 5 The firſt Reſurrection: 6 They bleſſed that have part therein. 7 Satan let looſe again. 8 Gog and Magog. 10 The devil caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone. 12 The laſt and general Reſurrection.

AND I ſaw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he laid hold on the dragon that old ſerpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thouſand years,

3 And caſt him into the bottomleſs pit, and ſhut him up, and ſet a ſeal upon him, that he ſhould deceive the nations no more, till the thouſand years ſhould be fulfilled: and after that, he muſt be looſed a little ſeaſon.

4 And I ſaw thrones, and they ſat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I ſaw the ſouls of them that were beheaded for the witneſs of Jeſus, and for the word of God, and which had not worſhipped the beaſt, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Chriſt a thouſand years.

5 But the reſt of the dead lived not again until the thouſand years were finiſhed. This is the firſt reſurrection.

6 Bleſſed and holy is he that hath part in the firſt reſurrection: on ſuch the ſecond death hath no power, but they ſhall be prieſts of God, and of Chriſt, and ſhall reign with him a thouſand years.

7 And when the thouſand years are expired, Satan ſhall be looſed out of his priſon.

8 And ſhall go out to deceive the nations, which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the ſand of the ſea.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compaſſed the camp of the ſaints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 And the devil that deceived them, was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and the falſe prophet are, and ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

11 And I ſaw a great white throne, and him that ſat on it, from whoſe face the earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them.

12 And I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the books, according to their works.

13 And the ſea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

14 And death and hell were caſt into the lake of fire: This is the ſecond death.

15 And whoſoever was not found written in the book of life, was caſt into the lake of fire.

CHAP. XXI.

1 A new heaven and a new earth. 10 The heavenly Jeruſalem, with a full deſcription thereof: 23 She needeth no ſun, the glory of God is her light. 24 The kings of the earth bring their riches unto her.

AND I ſaw a new heaven and a new earth: for the firſt heaven and the firſt earth were paſſed away; and there was no more ſea.

2 And I John ſaw the holy city, new Jeruſalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven, ſaying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they ſhall be his people, and God himſelf ſhall be with them, and be their God.

4 And God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain: for the former things are paſſed away.

5 And he that ſat upon the throne, ſaid, Behold, I make all things new. And he ſaid unto me, Write; for theſe words are true and faithful.

6 And he ſaid unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end: I will give unto him that is athirſt, of the fountain of the water of life freely.

7 He that overcometh ſhall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he ſhall be my ſon.

8 But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and ſorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone: which is the ſecond death.

9 And there came unto me one of the ſeven angels, which had the ſeven vials full of the ſeven laſt plagues, and talked with me, ſaying, Come hither, I will ſhew thee the bride, the Lambs wife.

10 And he carried me away in the ſpirit to a great and high mountain, and ſhewed me that great city, the holy Jeruſalem, deſcending out of heaven from God,

11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a ſtone moſt precious, even like a jaſper ſtone, clear as cryſtal;

12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Iſrael.

13 On the eaſt, three gates: on the north, three gates; on the ſouth, three gates; and on the weſt, three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apoſtles of the Lamb.

15 And he that talked with me, had a golden reed to meaſure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

16 And the city lieth four-ſquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he meaſured the city with the reed, twelve thouſand furlongs: the length, and the breadth, and height of it are equal.

17 And he meaſured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the meaſure of a man, that is, of the angel.

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jaſper; and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glaſs.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones. The firſt foundation was jaſper: the ſecond, ſapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, ſardonix; the ſixth ſardius; the ſeventh, chryſolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chryſopraſus; the eleventh, a jacinct; the twelfth, an amethyſt.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, every ſeveral gate was of one pearl: and the ſtreet of the city was pure gold, as it were tranſparent glaſs.

22 And I ſaw no temple therein: for the Lord God almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple of it.

23 And the city had no need of the ſun, neither of the moon to ſhine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 And the nations of them which are ſaved, ſhall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

25 And the gates of it ſhall not be ſhut at all by day; for there ſhall be no night there.

26 And they ſhall bring the glory and honour of the nations unto it.

27 And there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatſoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lambs book of life.

CHAP. XXII.

1 The river of the water of life. 2 The tree of life. 5 The light of the city of God is himſelf. 9 The angel will not be worſhipped. 18 Nothing may be added to the word of God, nor taken therefrom.

AND he ſhewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as chryſtal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb.

2 In the midſt of the ſtreet of it, and of either ſide of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And there ſhall be no more curſe: but the throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it; and his ſervants ſhall ſerve him.

4 And they ſhall ſee his face, and his name ſhall be in their foreheads.

5 And there ſhall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the ſun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they ſhall reign for ever and ever.

6 And he ſaid unto me, Theſe ſayings are faithful and true. And the Lord God of the holy prophets ſent his angel to ſhew unto his ſervants the things which muſt ſhortly be done.

7 Behold, I come quickly: Bleſſed is he that keepeth the ſayings of the prophecy of this book.

8 And I John ſaw theſe things, and heard them. And when I had heard and ſeen, I fell down to worſhip before the feet of the angel, which ſhewed me theſe things.

9 Then ſaith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-ſervant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the ſayings of this book: worſhip God.

10 And he ſaith unto me, Seal not the ſayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand.

11 He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous ſtill: and he that is holy, let him be holy ſtill.

12 And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work ſhall be.

13 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the firſt and the laſt.

14 Bleſſed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

15 For without are dogs, and ſorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whoſoever loveth and maketh a lie.

16 I Jeſus have ſent mine angel to teſtify unto you theſe things in the churches. I am the root and the offſpring of David, and the bright and morning ſtar.

17 And the Spirit and the bride ſay, Come. And let him that heareth ſay, Come. And let him that is athirſt, come: And whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18 For I teſtify unto every man that heareth the words of the propheſy of this book, if any man ſhall add unto theſe things, God ſhall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book.

19 And if any man ſhall take away from the words of the book of this propheſy, God ſhall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

20 He which teſtifieth theſe things ſaith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even ſo, come, Lord Jeſus.

21 The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

The Revelation of John, as may be obſerved in reading them, is written in the ſame ſtyle and language with the Prophecies of Daniel, and hath the ſame relation to them which they have to one another; ſo that all of them together make but one complete Prophecy; and in like manner it conſiſts of two parts, an introductory Prophecy, and an interpretation thereof.

The Prophecy is diſtinguiſh'd into ſeven ſucceſſive parts, by the opening of the ſeven ſeals of the book which Daniel was commanded to ſeal up: And hence it is called the Apocalypſe or Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. The time of the ſeventh ſeal is ſub-divided into eight ſucceſſive parts by the ſilence in Heaven for half an hour, and the ſounding of ſeven trumpets ſucceſſively: And the ſeventh trumpet ſounds to the battle of the great day of God Almighty, whereby the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Chriſt, and theſe are deſtroyed that deſtroyed the earth.

The interpretation begins with the words, And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was ſeen in his temple the ark of his Teſtament: And it continues to the end of the Prophecy. The temple is the ſcene of the viſions, and the viſions in the temple relate to the feaſt of the ſeventh month: For the feaſts of the Jews were typical of things to come. The Paſſover related to the firſt coming of Chriſt, and the feaſts of the ſeventh month to his ſecond coming: His firſt coming being therefore over before this Prophecy was given, the feaſts of the ſeventh month are here only alluded unto.

On the firſt day of that month, in the morning, the high-prieſt dreſſed the lamps: And in allufion hereunto, this Prophecy begins with a viſion of one like the Son of Man in the high-prieſt's habit, appearing as it were in the midſt of the ſeven golden candleſticks, or over-againſt the midſt of them, dreſſing the lamps, which appeared like a rod of ſeven ſtars in his right hand: And this dreſſing was performed by the ſending ſeven Epiſtles to the Angels or Biſhops of the ſeven Churches of Aſia, which in the primitive times illuminated the temple or Church Catholick. Theſe Epiſtles contain admonitions againſt the approaching apoſtacy, and therefore relate to the times when the apoſtacy began to work ſtrongly, and before it prevailed. It began to work in the Apoſtles days, and was to continue working till the man of ſin ſhall be revealed. It began to work in the diſciples of Simon, Menander, Carpocrates, Cerinthus, and ſuch ſorts of men as had imbibed the metaphyſical philoſophy of the Gentiles and Cabaliſtical Jews, and were thence called Gnoſticks. John calls them antichriſts, ſaying that in his days there were many antichriſts. But theſe being condemned by the Apoſtles, and their immediate diſciples, put the Churches in no danger during the opening of the firſt four ſeals. The viſions at the opening of theſe ſeals relate only to the civil affairs of the Heathen Roman empire. So long the apoſtolic traditions prevailed, and preſerved the Church in its purity: And therefore the affairs of the Church do not begin to be conſider'd in this Prophecy before the opening of the fifth ſeal. She began then to decline, and to want admonitions; and therefore is admoniſhed by theſe Epiſtles, till the apoſtacy prevailed and took place, which was at the opening of the ſeventh ſeal. The admonitions therefore in theſe ſeven Epiſtles relate to the ſtate of the Church in the times of the fifth and ſixth ſeals. At the opening of the fifth ſeal, the Church is purged from hypocrites by a great perſecution. At the opening of the ſixth, that which letted is taken out of the way, namely the Heathen Roman empire. At the opening of the ſeventh, the man of ſin is revealed. And to theſe times the ſeven Epiſtles relate.

The ſeven Angels, to whom theſe Epiſtles were written, anſwer to the ſeven amarc-holim, who were prieſts and chief officers of the temple, and had jointly the keys of the gates of the temple, with thoſe of the treaſuries, and the direction, appointment and overſight of all things in the temple.

After the lamps were dreſſed, John ſaw the door of the temple opened; and by the voice as it were of a trumpet, was called up to the eaſtern-gate of the great court, to ſee the viſions, ch. iv. 1. and behold a throne was ſet, ver. 2. viz. the mercy-ſeat upon the ark of the teſtament, which the Jews reſpected as the throne of God between the cherubims, Exod. xxv. 2. Pſal. xcix. 1. And he that ſat on it was to look upon like jaſper and ſardine-ſtone, ver. 3. that is, of an olive colour, the people of Judea being of that colour. And, the ſun being then in the eaſt, a rainbow was about the throne, the emblem of glory. And round about the throne were four and twenty ſeats; ver. 4. anſwering to the chambers of the four and twenty princes of the prieſts, twelve on the ſouth-ſide, and twelve on the north-ſide of the prieſts court. And upon the ſeats were four and twenty elders, &c. ver. 4.—repreſenting the princes of the four and twenty courſes of the prieſts clothed in linnen. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thundrings, and voices, ver. 5. viz. the flaſhes of the fire upon the altar at the morning-ſacrifice, and the thundering voices of thoſe that ſounded the trumpets, and ſung at the eaſtern-gate of the prieſts court; for theſe being between John and the throne appeared to him as proceeding from the throne. And there were ſeven lamps of fire burning, in the temple, before the throne, which are the ſeven ſpirits of God, ver. 5.—or Angels of the ſeven Churches, repreſented in the beginning of this Prophecy by ſeven ſtars. And before the throne was a ſea of glaſs clear as chryſtal, ver. 6. the brazen ſea between the porch of the temple and the altar, filled with clear water. And in the midſt of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beaſts full of eyes before and behind, ver. 6.—— that is, one beaſt before the throne and one behind it, appearing to John as in the midſt of the throne, and one on either ſide in the circle about about it, to repreſent by the multitude of their eyes the people ſtanding in the four ſides of the peoples court. And the firſt beaſt was like a a lion, &c. ver. 7. For as, the people of Iſrael in the wilderneſs encamped round about the tabernacle, and on the eaſt ſide were three tribes under the ſtandard of Judah, on the weſt were three tribes under the ſtandard of Ephraim, on the ſouth were three tribes under the ſtandard of Reuben, and on the north were three tribes under the ſtandard of Dan, Numb. ii. And the ſtandard of Judah was a lion, that of Ephraim an ox, that of Reuben a man, and that of Dan an eagle, as the Jews affirm. Whence were framed the hieroglyphicks of cherubims and ſeraphims, to repreſent the people of Iſrael. A cherubim had one body with four faces, the faces of a lion, an ox, a man and an eagle, looking to the four winds of Heaven, without turning about, as in Ezekiel's viſion, chap. 1. And four ſeraphims had the ſame four faces with four bodies, one face to every body: The four beaſts are therefore four ſeraphims ſtanding in the four ſides of the peoples court; the firſt in the eaſtern ſide with the head of a lion, the ſecond in the weſtern ſide with the head of an ox, the third in the ſouthern ſide with the head of a man, the fourth in the northern ſide with the head of an eagle: And all four ſignify together the twelve tribes of Iſrael, out of whom the hundred forty and four thouſand were ſealed, Apoc. vii. 4. And the four beaſts had each of them ſix wings, ver. 8. two to a tribe, in all twenty and four wings, anſwering to the twenty and four ſtations of the people. And they were full of eyes within, or under their wings. And they reſt not day and night, or at the morning and evening-ſacrifices, ſaying, holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come, ver. 8. Theſe animals are therefore the ſeraphims, which appeared to Iſaiah in a viſion, Iſa. vi. like this of the Revelation. For there alſo the Lord ſat upon a throne in the temple; and the ſeraphims each with ſix wings cried, Holy, holy, holy Lord God of hoſts. And when thoſe beaſts, ver. 9.——11. Thus, at the morning and evening ſacrifices, ſo ſoon as the ſacrifice was laid upon the altar, and the drink-offering began to be poured out, the trumpets ſounded, and the Levites ſang by courſe three times; and every time when the trumpets ſounded, the people fell down and worſhipped. Three times therefore did the people worſhip; to expreſs which number, the beaſts cry Holy, holy, holy: And the ſong being ended, the people prayed ſtanding, till the ſolemnity was finiſhed. In the mean time the prieſts went into the temple, and there fell down before him that ſat upon the throne, and worſhipped.

Chap. v. Ver. 1. And John ſaw, in the right hand of him that ſat upon the throne, a book written within and on the backſide, ſealed with ſeven ſeals, viz. the book which Daniel was commanded to ſeal up, and which is here repreſented by the prophetic book of the law laid up on the right ſide of the ark, as it were in the right hand of him that ſat on the throne: For the feſtivals and ceremonies of the law preſcribed to the people in this book, adumbrated thoſe things which were predicted in the book of Daniel; and the writing within and on the backſide of this book, relates to the ſynchronal Prophecies. And none was found worthy to open the book but the Lamb of God, Apoc. v. 2.——9. And lo, in the midſt of the throne and of the four beaſts, and in the midſt of the elders, ver. 6. that is, at the foot of the altar, ſtood a lamb as it had been ſlain, the morning ſacrifice; having ſeven horns, which are the ſeven Churches, and ſeven eyes, &c. ver. 6.——10. Where the beaſts and elders repreſent the primitive Chriſtians of all nations; and the worſhip of theſe Chriſtians in their Churches is here repreſented under the form of worſhipping God and the Lamb in the temple: God for his benefaction in creating all things, and the Lamb for his benefaction in redeeming us with his blood: God as ſitting upon the throne and living for ever, and the Lamb as exalted above all by the merits of his death. And I heard, ſaith John, the voice of many Angels, ſaying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb, &c. And of every creature, ſay, Bleſſing, &c. be unto him, &c. and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. And the four beaſts ſaid, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worſhipped him that liveth for ever and ever, ver. 11.——14. This was the worſhip of the primitive Chriſtians. And

It was the cuſtom for the high prieſt, ſeven days before the faſt of the ſeventh month, to continue conſtantly in the temple, and ſtudy the book of the law, that he might be perfect in it againſt the day of expiation; wherein the ſervice, which was various and intricate, was wholly to be performed by himſelf; part of which ſervice was reading the law to the people: And to promote his ſtudying it, there were certain prieſts appointed by the ſanhedrim to be with him thoſe ſeven days in one of his chambers in the temple, and there to diſcourſe with him about the law, and read it to him, and put him in mind of reading and ſtudying it himſelf. This his opening and reading the law thoſe ſeven days, is alluded unto in the Lamb's opening the ſeals. We are to conceive that thoſe ſeven days begin in the evening before each day; for the Jews began their day in the evening, and that the ſolemnity of the faſt begins in the morning of the ſeventh day.

The ſeventh ſeal was therefore opened on the day of expiation, and then there was ſilence in Heaven for half an hour. And an Angel, the high prieſt, ſtood at the altar, having a golden cenſer; and there was given him much incenſe, that he ſhould offer it with the prayers of all Saints, upon the golden altar which was before the throne, ch. viii. 1.——3. Where note, The cuſtom was on other days, for one of the prieſts to take fire from the great altar in a ſilver cenſer; but on this day, for the high-prieſt to take fire from the great altar in a golden cenſer: And when he was come down from the great altar, took incenſe from one of the prieſts who brought it to him, and went with it to the golden altar: And while he offered the incenſe, the people prayed without in ſilence, which is the ſilence in Heaven for half an hour. When the high-prieſt had laid the incenſe on the altar, he carried a cenſer of it burning in his hand, into the moſt Holy Place before the ark. And the ſmoke of the incenſe, with the prayers of the Saints, aſcended up before God out of the Angel's hand, ver. 4. On other days there was a certain meaſure of incenſe for the golden altar: On this day there was a greater quantity for both the altar and the moſt Holy Place, and therefore it is called much incenſe. After this the Angel took the cenſer, and filled it with fire from the great altar, and caſt it into the earth, ver. 5. that is, by the hands of the prieſts who belong to his myſtical body, he caſt it to the earth without the temple, for burning the goat which was the Lord's lot. And at this and other concomitant ſacrifices, until the evening-ſacrifice was ended, there were voices, and thundrings, and lightnings, and an earthquake, ibid. that is, the voice of the high-prieſt reading the law to the people, and other voices and thundrings from the trumpets and temple-muſick at the ſacrifices, and lightnings from the fire of the altar.

The ſolemnity of the day of expiation being finiſhed, the ſeven angels ſound their trumpets at the great ſacrifices of the ſeven days of the feaſt of tabernacles; and at the ſame ſacrifices, the ſeven thunders utter their voices, which are the muſick of the temple, and ſinging of the Levites, intermixed with the ſoundings of the trumpets: and the ſeven angels pour out their vials of wrath, which are the drink-offerings of thoſe ſacrifices.

When ſix of the ſeals were opened, John ſaid: And after theſe things, Apoc. vii. that is, after the viſions of the ſixth ſeal, I ſaw four angels, &c. ver. 1. And I ſaw another angel, &c. ſent to ſeal the ſervants of God in their foreheads: Which ſealing alludes to a tradition of the Jews, that upon the day of expiation all the people of Iſrael are ſealed up in the books of life and death. For the Jews in their Talmud tell us, that in the beginning of every new year, or firſt day of the month Tiſri, the ſeventh month of the ſacred year, three books are opened in judgment; the book of life, in which the names of thoſe are written who are perfectly juſt; the book of death, in which the names of thoſe are written who are atheiſts or very wicked; and a third book, of thoſe whoſe judgment is ſuſpended till the day of expiation, and whoſe names are not written in the book of life or death before that day; ſee Buxtorf. in Synagoga Judaica, c. 18, 21. The firſt ten days of this month they call the penitential days; and all theſe days they faſt and pray very much, and are very devout, that on the tenth day their ſins may be remitted, and their names may be written in the book of life; which day is therefore called the day of expiation. And upon this tenth day, in returning home from the ſynagogues, they ſay to one another, God the Creator ſeal you to a good year. For they conceive that the books are now ſealed up, and that the ſentence of God remains unchanged henceforward to the end of the year. The ſame thing is ſignified by the two goats, upon whoſe foreheads the high-prieſt yearly, on the day of expiation, lays the two lots inſcribed, For God and For Azazel; God's lot ſignifying the people who are ſealed with the name of God in their foreheads; and the lot Azazel, which was ſent into the wilderneſs, repreſenting thoſe who receive the mark and name of the beaſt, and go into the wilderneſs with the great whore; ibid.

The ſervants of God being therefore ſealed in the day of expiation, we may conceive that this ſealing is ſynchronal to the viſions which appear upon opening the ſeventh ſeal; and that when the Lamb had opened ſix of the ſeals and ſeen the viſions relating to the inſide of the ſixth, he looked on the backſide of the ſeventh ſeal, and then ſaw the four angels holding the four winds of heaven, and another angel aſcending from the eaſt with the ſeal of God. Conceive alſo, that the angels which held the four winds were the firſt four of the ſeven angels, who upon opening the ſeventh ſeal were ſeen ſtanding before God; and that upon their holding the winds, there was ſilence in heaven for half an hour; and that while the ſervants of God were ſealing, the angels with the golden cenſer offered their prayers with incenſe upon the golden altar, and read the law; and that ſo ſoon as they were ſealed, the winds hurt the earth at the ſounding of the firſt trumpet, and the ſea at the ſounding of the ſecond; theſe winds ſignifying the wars, to which the firſt four trumpets ſounded. For as the firſt four ſeals are diſtinguiſhed from the three laſt by the appearance of four horſemen towards the four winds of heaven; ſo the wars of the firſt four trumpets are diſtinguiſhed from thoſe of the three laſt, by repreſenting theſe by four winds, and the others by three great woes.

In one of Ezekiel's viſions, when the Babylonian captivity was at hand, ſix men appeared with ſlaughter-weapons; and a ſeventh, who appeared among them clothed in white linen and a writer's inkworn by his ſide, is commanded to go through the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a mark upon the foreheads of the men that ſigh and cry for all the abominations done in the midſt thereof; Ezek. ix. and then the ſix men, like the angels of the firſt ſix trumpets, are commanded to ſlay thoſe men who are not marked. Conceive therefore that the hundred forty and four thouſand are ſealed, to preſerve them from the plagues of the firſt ſix trumpets; and that at length by the preaching of the everlaſting Goſpel, they grow into a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people and tongues: and at the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet come out of the great tribulation with palms in their hands; the kingdoms of this world, by the war to which that trumpet ſounds, becoming the kingdoms of God and his Chriſt. For the ſolemnity of the great hoſannah was kept by the Jews upon the ſeventh or laſt day of the feaſt of tabernacles; the Jews upon that day carrying palms in their hands, and crying hoſannah.

After ſix of the angels, anſwering to the ſix men with ſlaughter-weapons, had ſounded their trumpets, the Lamb in the form of a mighty angel came down from heaven clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the ſun, and his feet as pillars of fire; chap. x. ver. 1. the ſhape in which Chriſt appeared in the beginning of this Prophecy; and he had in his hand a little book open, chap. v. the book which he had newly opened; for he received but one book from him that ſitteth upon the throne, and he alone was worthy to open and look on this book. And he ſet his right foot upon the ſea, and his left foot on the earth, and cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth; ver. 2, 3. It was the cuſtom for the high-prieſt on the day of expiation, to ſtand in an elevated place in the peoples court, at the eaſtern gate of the prieſts court, and read the law to the people, while the heifer and the goat, which was the Lord's lot, were burning without the temple. We may therefore ſuppoſe him ſtanding in ſuch a manner, that his right foot might appear to John, as it were, ſtanding on the ſea of glaſs, and his left foot on the ground of the houſe; and that he cried with a loud voice, in reading the law on the day of expiation. And when he had cried, ſeven thunders uttered their voices; ibid. Thunders are the voice of a cloud, and a cloud ſignifies a multitude; and this multitude may be Levites, who ſang with thundering voices, and played with muſical inſtruments at the great ſacrifices, on the ſeven days of the feaſt of tabernacles; at which times the trumpets alſo ſounded. For the trumpets ſounded, and the Levites ſang alternately, three times at every ſacrifice. The Prophecy therefore of the ſeven thunders is nothing elſe than a repetition of the Prophecy of the ſeven trumpets in another form. And the angel which I ſaw ſtand upon the ſea and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven, and ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever, that after the ſeven thunders there ſhould be time no longer; but in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, when he ſhall begin to ſound, the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed, as he hath declared to his ſervants the Prophets; ver. 4,—7. The voices of the thunders therefore laſt to the end of this world, and ſo do thoſe of the trumpets.

And the voice which I heard from heaven, ſaith John, ſpake unto me again, and ſaid, Go and take the little book, &c. ver. 8.—11. This is an introduction to a new Prophecy, to a repetition of the Prophecy of the whole book; and alludes to Ezekiel's eating a roll or book ſpread open before him, and written within and without, full of lamentations and mourning and woe, but ſweet in his mouth. Eating and drinking ſignify acquiring and poſſeſſing; and eating the book is becoming inſpired with the Prophecy contained in it. It implies being inſpired in a vigorous and extraordinary manner with the Prophecy of the whole book, and therefore ſignifies a lively repetition of the whole Prophecy by way of interpretation, and begins not till the Prophecy, that of the ſeals and trumpets, is ended. It was ſweet in John's mouth, and therefore begins not with the bitter Prophecy of the Babylonian captivity, and the Gentiles being in the outward court of the temple, and treading the holy city under foot; and the propheſying of the two witneſſes in ſackcloth, and their ſmiting the earth with all plagues, and being killed by the beaſt; but ſo ſoon as the Prophecy of the trumpets is ended, it begins with the ſweet Prophecy of the glorious woman in heaven, and the victory of Michael over the dragon; and after that, it is bitter in John's belly, by a large deſcription of the times of the great apoſtacy.

Chap. xi. ver. 1. And the angel ſtood, upon the earth and ſea, ſaying, Riſe and meaſure the temple of God and the altar, and them that worſhip therein, that is, their courts with the buildings thereon, viz. the ſquare court of the temple called the ſeparate place, and the ſquare court of the altar called the prieſts court, and the court of them that worſhip in the temple, called the new court: But the great court which is without the temple, leave out, and meaſure it not, for it is given to the Gentiles, and the holy city ſhall they tread under foot forty and two months. This meaſuring hath reference to Ezekiel's meaſuring the temple of Solomon; there the whole temple, including the outward court, was meaſured, to ſignify that it ſhould be rebuilt in the latter days. Here the courts of the temple and altar, and they who worſhip therein, are only meaſured, to ſignify the building of a ſecond temple, for thoſe that are ſealed out of all the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and worſhip in the inward court of ſincerity and truth: But John is commanded to leave out the outward court, or outward form of religion and Church-government, becauſe it is given to the Babylonian Gentiles. For the glorious woman in Heaven, the remnant of whoſe ſeed kept the commandments of God, and had the teſtimony of Jeſus, continued the ſame woman in outward form after her flight into the wilderneſs, whereby ſhe quitted her former ſincerity and piety, and became the great whore. She loſt her chaſtity, but kept her outward form and ſhape. And while the Gentiles tread the holy city underfoot, and worſhip in the outward court, the two witneſſes, repreſented perhaps by the two feet of the Angel ſtanding on the ſea and earth, propheſied againſt them, and had power, like Elijah and Moſes, to conſume their enemies with fire proceeding out of their mouth, and to ſhut Heaven that it rain not in the days of their Prophecy, and to turn the waters into blood, and to ſmite the earth with all plagues as often as they will, ver. 5, 6. that is, with the plagues of the trumpets and vials of wrath; and at length they are ſlain, riſe again from the dead, and aſcend up to Heaven in a cloud; and then the ſeventh trumpet ſounds to the day of judgment.

The Prophecy being finiſhed, John is inſpired a-new by the eaten book, and begins the interpretation thereof with theſe words, And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was ſeen in his temple the ark of the teſtament, ver. 19. By the ark, we may know that this was the firſt temple; for the ſecond temple had no ark. And there were lightnings, and voices, and thundrings, and an earthquake, and great hail, ibid. Theſe anſwer to the wars in the Roman empire, during the reign of the four horſemen, who appeared upon opening the firſt four ſeals. And there appeared a great wonder in Heaven, a woman clothed with the ſun, ch. xii. 1. In the Prophecy, the affairs of the Church begin to be conſidered at the opening of the fifth ſeal; and in the interpretation, they begin at the ſame time with the viſion of the Church in the form of a woman in Heaven: There ſhe is perſecuted, and here ſhe is pained in travail. The interpretation proceeds down firſt to the ſealing of the ſervants of God, and marking the reſt with the mark of the beaſt; and then to the day of judgment, repreſented by a harveſt and vintage. Then it returns back to the times of opening the ſeventh ſeal, and interprets the Prophecy of the ſeven trumpets by the pouring out of ſeven vials of wrath. The Angels who pour them out, come out of the temple of the tabernacle; that is, out of the ſecond temple, for the tabernacle had no outward court. Then it returns back again to the times of meaſuring the temple and altar, and of the Gentiles worſhipping in the outward court, and of the beaſt killing the witneſſes in the ſtreets of the great city; and interprets theſe things by the viſion of a woman ſitting on the beaſt, drunken with the blood of the Saints; and proceeds in the interpretation downwards to the fall of the great city and the day of judgment: As will more fully appear from a compariſon thereof with the Prophecy of Daniel, and with what we annotated thereon; but more fully by the following obſervations. And Thus having cleared, what I intended, that the whole Prophecy of this Book is an Illuſion to the Book of the Law of Moſes, as to its ceremonial part in particular. I ſhall now proceed to ſhew how we are to interpret its hiſtorical parts. Therefore,

Let it be obſerved, that the whole ſcene of Sacred Prophecy is compoſed of three principal parts: The regions beyond Euphrates, repreſented by the two firſt beaſts of Daniel; the empire of the Greeks on this ſide of Euphrates, repreſented by the leopard and by the he-goat; and the empire of the Latins on this ſide Greece, repreſented by the beaſt with ten horns, And to theſe three parts, the phraſes of the third part of the earth, ſea, rivers, trees, ſhips, ſtars, ſun, and moon, relate. I place the body of the fourth beaſt on this ſide of Greece, becauſe the three firſt of the four beaſts had their lives prolonged after the dominion was taken away, and therefore belong not to the body of the fourth. He only ſtamped them with his feet.

By the earth, the Jews underſtood the great continent of all Aſia and Africa, to which they had acceſs by land: And by the iſles of the ſea, they underſtood the places to which they ſailed by ſea, particularly all Europe: And hence we collect that, in this Prophecy, the earth and ſea are put for the nations of the Greek and Latin empires.

The third and fourth beaſts of Daniel are the ſame with the dragon and ten-horned beaſt of John, but with this difference: John puts the dragon for the whole Roman empire while it continued entire, becauſe it was entire when that Prophecy was given; and the beaſt he conſiders not till the empire became divided: And then he puts the dragon for the empire of the Greeks, and the beaſt for the empire of the Latins. Hence it is that the dragon and beaſt have common heads and common horns: But the dragon hath crowns only upon his heads, and the beaſt only upon his horns: Becauſe the beaſt and his horns reigned not before they were divided from the dragon; and when the dragon gave the beaſt his throne, the ten horns received power as kings, the ſame hour with the beaſt; ſee ch. xiii. The heads are ſeven ſucceſſive kings. Four of them were the four horſemen which appeared at the opening of the firſt four ſeals. In the latter end of the ſixth head, or ſeal, conſidered as preſent in the viſions, it is ſaid, five of the ſeven kings are fallen, and one is, and another is not yet come; and the beaſt that was and is not, being wounded to death with a ſword, he is the eighth, and of the ſeven: He was therefore a collateral part of the ſeventh. The horns are the ſame with thoſe of Daniel's fourth beaſt, deſcribed above.

The four horſemen which appear at the opening of the firſt four ſeals, have been well explained by Mr. Mede; excepting that I had rather continue the third to the end of the reign of the three Gordians and Philip the Arabian, thoſe being kings from the ſouth, and begin the fourth with the reign of Decius, and continue it till the reign of Diocleſian. For the fourth horſeman ſat upon a pale horſe, and his name was Death; and hell followed with him; and power was given them to kill unto the fourth part of the earth, with the ſword, and with famine, and with plague, and with the beaſts of the earth, or armies of invaders and rebels: And as ſuch were the times during all this interval. Hitherto the Roman empire continued in an undivided monarchial form, except rebellions; and ſuch it is repreſented by the four horſemen. But Diocleſian divided it between himſelf and Maximianus, A. C. 285; and it continued in that divided ſtate, till the victory of Conſtantine the Great over Licinius, A. C. 323, which put an end to the Heathen perſecutions ſet on foot by Diocleſian and Maximianus, and deſcribed at the opening of the fifth ſeal. But this diviſion of the empire was imperfect, the whole being ſtill under one and the ſame ſenate. The ſame victory of Conſtantine over Licinius a Heathen perſecutor, began the fall of the Heathen empire, deſcribed at the opening of the ſixth ſeal: And the viſions of this ſeal continue till after the reign of Julian the apoſtate, he being a Heathen emperor, and reigning over the whole Roman empire.

The affairs of the Church begin to be conſidered at the opening of the fifth ſeal, as was ſaid above. Then ſhe is repreſented (in ch. xii.) by a woman in the temple of Heaven, clothed with the ſun of righteouſneſs, and the moon of Jewiſh ceremonies under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve ſtars relating to the twelve Apoſtles and to the twelve tribes of Iſrael. When ſhe fled from the temple into the wilderneſs, ſhe left in the temple a remnant of her ſeed, who kept the commandments of God, and had the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt; and therefore before her flight ſhe repreſented the true primitive Church of God, though afterwards ſhe degenerated like Aholah and Aholibah. In Diocleſian's perſecution ſhe cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered, ver. 2. And in the end of that perſecution, by the victory of Conſtantine over Maxientius, A. C. 312, ſhe brought forth a man-child, ſuch a child as was to rule all nations with a rod of iron, a Chriſtian empire. And her child, by the victory of Conſtantine over Licinius, A. C. 323, was caught up unto God and to his throne, ver. 5. And the woman, by the diviſion of the Roman empire into the Greek and Latin empires, fled from the firſt temple into the wilderneſs, or ſpiritually barren empire of the Latins, where ſhe is found afterwards ſitting upon the beaſt and upon the ſeven mountains; and is called the great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth, that is, over the ten kings who give their kingdom to her beaſt.

But before her flight there was war in Heaven between Michael and the dragon, ver. 7. the Chriſtian and the Heathen religions; and the dragon, that old ſerpent, called the Devil and Satan, who deceiveth the whole world, was caſt out to the earth, and his Angels were caſt out with him And John heard a voice in Heaven, ſaying, &c. Therefore, rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Wo be to the inhabiters of the earth and ſea, or people of the Greek and Latin empires, for the Devil is come down amongſt you, &c. ver. 7——12.

And when the dragon (the Heathen emperor) ſaw that he was caſt down from the Roman throne, and the man-child (a Chriſtian emperor) caught up thither, he perſecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child; and to her, by the diviſion of the Roman empire between the cities of Rome and Conſtantinople, A. C. 330, were given two wings of a great eagle, the ſymbol of the Roman empire, that ſhe might flee from the firſt temple into the wilderneſs of Arabia, to her place at Babylon myſtically ſo called. And the ſerpent, by the diviſion of the ſame empire between the ſons of Conſtantine the Great, A. C. 337, caſt out of his mouth water as a flood, the weſtern empire, after the woman; that he might cauſe her to be carried away by the flood. And the earth, or Greek empire, helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed up the flood, by the victory of Conſtantius over Magnentius, A. C. 353, and thus the beaſt was wounded to death with a ſword. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, in the reign of Julian the apoſtate, A. C. 361, and, by a new diviſion of the empire between Valentinian and Valens, A. C. 364, went from her into the eaſtern empire to make war with the remnant of her ſeed, which ſhe left behind her when ſhe fled: And thus the beaſt revived, ver. 13.——17. By the next diviſion of the empire, which was between Gratian and Theodoſius, A. C 379, the beaſt with ten horns roſe out of the ſea, and the beaſt with two horns out of the earth: And by the laſt diviſion thereof, which was between the ſons of Theodoſius, A. C. 395, the dragon gave the beaſt his power and throne, and great authority. And the ten horns received power as kings, the ſame hour with the beaſt

At length the woman arrived at her place of temporal as well as ſpiritual dominion upon the back of the beaſt, where ſhe is nouriſhed a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the ſerpent; ch. xii. 14. not in his kingdom, but at a diſtance from him. She is nouriſhed by the merchants of the earth, three times or years and an half, or 42 months, or 1260 days: And in theſe Prophecies days are put for years. During all this time the beaſt acted, and ſhe ſat upon him, that is, reigned over him, and over the ten kings who gave their power and ſtrength, that is, their kingdom to the beaſt; and ſhe was drunken with the blood of the Saints. By all theſe circumſtances ſhe is the eleventh horn of Daniel's fourth beaſt, who reigned with a look more ſtout than his fellows, and was of a different kind from the reſt, and had eyes and a mouth like the woman; and made war with the ſaints, and prevailed againſt them, and wore them out, and thought to change times and laws, and had them given into his hand, until a time, and times, and half a time. Theſe characters of the woman, and little horn of the beaſt, agree perfectly: In reſpect of her temporal dominion, ſhe was the horn of a beaſt; in reſpect of her ſpiritual dominion, ſhe rode upon him in the form of a woman, and was his Church, and committed fornication with the ten kings.

The ſecond beaſt, which roſe up out of the earth, was the Church of the Greek empire: For it had two horns like thoſe of the Lamb, and therefore was a Church; and it ſpake as the dragon, and therefore was of his religion; and it came up out of the earth, and by conſequence in his kingdom. It is called alſo the falſe prophet who wrought miracles before the firſt beaſt, by which he deceived them that received his mark, and worſhipped his image. When the dragon went from the woman to make war with the remnant of her ſeed, this beaſt ariſing out of the earth aſſiſted in that war, and cauſed the earth and them which dwell therein to worſhip the authority of the firſt beaſt, whoſe mortal wound was healed, and to make an image to him, that is, to aſſemble a body of men like him in point of religion. He had alſo power to give life and authority to the image, ſo that it could both ſpeak, and by dictating cauſe that all religious bodies of men, who would not worſhip the authority of the image, ſhould be myſtically killed. And he cauſeth all men to receive a mark in their right hand or in their forehead, and that no man might buy or ſell ſave he that had the mark, or the name of the beaſt, or the number of his name; all the reſt being excommunicated by the beaſt with two horns; ſee ch. xiii. 16, &c. His mark is +++, and his name ΛΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ, and the number of his name 666.

Thus the beaſt, after he was wounded to death with a ſword and revived, was deified, as the Heathens uſed to deify their kings after death, and had an image erected to him; and his worſhippers were initiated in this new religion, by receiving the mark or name of this new God, or the number of his name. By killing all that will not worſhip him and his image, the firſt temple, illuminated by the lamps of the ſeven Churches, is demoliſhed, and a new temple built for them who will not worſhip him; and the outward court of this new temple, or outward form of a Church, is given to the Gentiles, who worſhip the beaſt and his image: While they who will not worſhip him, are ſealed with the name of God in their foreheads, and retire into the inward court of this new temple. Theſe are the 144000 ſealed out of all the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and called the two witneſſes, as being derived from the two wings of the woman while ſhe was flying into the wilderneſs, and repreſented by two of the ſeven candleſticks. Theſe appear to John in the inward court of the ſecond temple, ſtanding on Mount Sion with the Lamb, and as it were on the ſea of glaſs. Theſe are the Saints of the Moſt High, and the hoſt of Heaven, and the holy people ſpoken of by Daniel, as worn out and trampled under foot, and deſtroyed in the latter times by the little horns of his fourth beaſt and he-goat.

While the Gentiles tread the holy city under foot, God gives power to his two witneſſes, and they propheſy a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days clothed in ſackcloth. They are called the two olive-trees, with relation to the two olive-trees, which in Zechary's viſion, ch. iv. ſtand on either ſide of the golden candleſtick to ſupply the lamps with oil: And olive-trees, according to the Apoſtle Paul, repreſent Churches, Rom. xi. They ſupply the lamps with oil, by maintaining teachers. They are alſo called the two candleſticks; which in this Prophecy ſignify Churches, the ſeven Churches of Aſia being repreſented by ſeven candleſticks. Five of theſe Churches were found faulty, and threatned if they did not repent; the other two were without fault, and ſo their candleſticks were fit to be placed in the ſecond temple. Theſe were the Churches in Smyrna and Philadelphia. They were in a ſtate of tribulation and perſecution, and the only two of the ſeven in ſuch a ſtate: And ſo their candleſticks were fit to repreſent the Churches in affliction in the times of the ſecond temple, and the only two of the ſeven that were fit. The two witneſſes are not new Churches: They are the poſterity of the primitive Church, the poſterity of the two wings of the woman, and ſo are fitly repreſented by two of the primitive candleſticks. We may conceive therefore, that when the firſt temple was deſtroyed, and a new one built for them who worſhip in the inward court, two of the ſeven candleſticks were placed in this new temple. And

Now in regard to the Epiſtles to the ſeven churches, they relate to the Church when ſhe began to decline and contain admonitions againſt the great apoſtacy then approaching: For Euſebius, having brought down his Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory to the reign of Diocleſian, deſcribes the ſtate of the Church thus: Qualem quantamque gloriam ſimul ac libertatem doctrina veræ erga ſupremum Deum pietatis a Chriſto primum hominibus annunciata, apud omnes Græcos pariter & barbaros ante perſecutionem noſtra memoria excitatam, conſecuta ſit, nos certe pro merito explicare non poſſumus, &c. And a little after: Jam vero quis innumerabilem hominum quotidie ad fidem Chriſti confugientium turbam, &c. cumulate poſſit deſcribere? &c. atque hæc nec livor ullus atterere, nec malignitas dæmonis faſcinare, nec hominum inſidiæ prohibere unquam potuerunt, quamdiu omnipotentis Dei dextra populum ſuum, utpote tali dignum præſidio, texit atque cuſtodiit. Sed cum ex nimia libertate in negligentiam ac deſidiam prolapſi eſſemus; cum alter alteri invidere atque obtrectare cæpiſſet, &c. cum Antiſtites adverſus Antiſtites, populi in populos colliſi, jurgia ac tumultus agitarent, &c. tum divina ultio, levi brachio ut ſolet, integro adhuc eccleſiæ ſtatu, & fidelium turbis libere convenientibus, ſenſim ac moderate in nos cæpit animadvertere; orſa primum perſecutione ab iis qui militabant. Cum vero ſenſu omni deſtituti de placando Dei numine ne cogitaremus quidem, &c. tunc demum juxta dictum Hieremiæ, obſcuravit Dominus in ira ſua filiam Sion, & dejecit de cælo gloriam Iſrael,——per Eccleſiarum ſcilicet ſubverſionem, &c And to this ſtate of the Church agrees the firſt of the ſeven Epiſtles to the angel of the ſeven Churches, that to the Church in Epheſus. I have ſomething againſt thee, ſaith Chriſt to the angel of that Church; Revel. ii. 4, &c. becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candleſtick, out of its place, except thou repent. But this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I alſo hate. Who theſe Nicolaitanes were, I have noted before on chap. ii.

The perſecution of Diocleſian began in the year of Chriſt 302, and laſted ten years in the eaſtern empire, and two years in the weſtern. To this ſtate of the Church the ſecond Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna, agrees, in Revel. ii. 9, 10. I know, ſaith Chriſt, thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich; and I know the blaſphemy of them, which ſay they are Jews, &c. The tribulation of ten days can agree to no other perſecution than that of Diocleſian, it being the only perſecution which laſted ten years. By the blaſphemy of them which ſay they are Jews and are not, but are the ſynagogue of Satan, I underſtand the idolatry of the Nicolaitanes, who falſly ſaid they were Chriſtians.

The Nicolaitanes are complained of alſo in the third Epiſtle, at ver. 14. as men that held the doctrine of Balaam, &c. For Balaam taught the Moabites and Midianites to tempt and invite Iſrael by their women to commit fornication, and to feaſt with them at the ſacrifices of their gods; ſee Numb. xxv. 1, 2,—18. and xxxi. 16. The dragon therefore began now to come down among the inhabitants of the earth and ſea.

The Nicolaitanes are alſo complained of in the fourth Epiſtle, under the name of the woman Jezabel, who calleth herſelf a propheteſs, &c. The woman therefore began now to fly into the wilderneſs.

The reign of Conſtantine the Great, from the time of his conquering Licinius, was monarchial over the whole Roman empire. Then the empire became divided between the ſons of Conſtantine; and afterwards it was again united under Conſtantius, by his victory over Magnentius. To the affairs of the Church in theſe three ſucceſſive periods of time, the third, fourth, and fifth Epiſtles, that is, thoſe to the angels of the Churches in Pergamus, Thyatira, and Sardis, ſeem to relate. The next emperor was Julian the apoſtate.

In the ſixth Epiſtle, to the angel of the Church in Philadelphia, Chriſt ſaith, Revel. iii. 10,—12. Becauſe, in the reign of the heathen emperor Julian, thou haſt kept the word of my patience, I alſo will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which by the woman's flying into the wilderneſs, and the dragon's making war with the remnant of her ſeed, and the killing of all who will not worſhip the image of the beaſt, ſhall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth, and to diſtinguiſh them by ſealing the one with the name of God in their foreheads, and marking the other with the mark of the beaſt. Him that overcometh, I will make a pillar in the temple of my God; and he ſhall go no more out of it. And I will write upon him the name of my God in his forehead. So the Chriſtians of the Church of Philadelphia, as many of them as overcome, are ſealed with the ſeal of God, and placed in the ſecond temple, and go no more out. The ſame is to be underſtood of the Church in Smyrna, which alſo kept the word of God's patience, and was without fault. Theſe two churches, with their poſterity, are therefore the two pillars, and the two candleſticks, and the two witneſſes in the ſecond temple. After the reign of the emperor Julian, and his ſucceſſor Jovian, who reigned but five months, the empire became again divided between Valentinian and Valens. Then the Church Catholick, in the Epiſtle to the angel of the Church of Laodicea, Revel. iii. 16, 17. is reprehended as lukewarm, and threatned to be ſpewed out of Chriſt's mouth. She ſaid, that ſhe was rich and increaſed with goods, and had need of nothing, being in outward proſperity; and knew not that ſhe was inwardly wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked. She is therefore ſpewed out of Chriſt's mouth, at the opening of the ſeventh ſeal: And this puts an end to the times of the firſt temple.

About one half of the Roman empire turned Chriſtians in the time of Conſtantine the Great, and of his ſons. After Julian had opened the temples, and had reſtored the worſhip of the Heathens, the emperors Valentinian and Valens tolerated it all their reign; and therefore the Prophecy of the ſixth ſeal was not fully accompliſhed before the reign of their ſucceſſor Gratian. It was the cuſtom of the Heathen prieſts, in the beginning of the reign of every ſovereign emperor, to offer him the dignity and habit of the Pontifex Maximus. This dignity all emperors had hitherto accepted: But Gracian rejected it, threw down the idols, interdicted the ſacrifices, and took away their revenues with the ſalaries and authority of the prieſts. Theodoſius the Great followed his example; and Heatheniſm afterwards recovered it ſelf no more, but decreaſed ſo faſt, that Prudentius, about ten years after the death of Theodoſius, called the Heathens vix pauca ingenia & pars hominum rariſſima. Whence the affairs of the ſixth ſeal ended with the reign of Valens, or rather with the beginning of the reign of Theodoſius, when he like his predeceſſor Gratian, rejected the dignity of Pontifex Maximus. For the Romans were very much infeſted by the invaſions of foreign nations in the reign of Valentinian and Valens. As all hiſtory declares; ſee alſo the Poet Claudian.

And whilſt the emperors were buſy in repelling theſe enemies, the Hunns and Alans and Goths came over the Danube in two bodies, overcame and ſlew Valens, and made ſo great a ſlaughter of the Roman army, that Ammianus ſaith: Nec ulla Annalibus præter Cannenſem ita ad internecionem res legitur geſta. Theſe wars were not fully ſtopt on all ſides till the beginning of the reign of Theodoſius, A. C. 379 and 380: But thenceforward the empire remained quiet from foreign armies, till his death, A. C. 315. So long the four winds were held: And ſo long there was ſilence in Heaven. And the ſeventh ſeal was opened when this ſilence began.

The name of woes is given to the wars to which the three laſt trumpets ſound, to diſtinguiſh them from the wars of the four firſt. The ſacrifices on the firſt four days of the feaſt of tabernacles, at which the firſt four trumpets ſound, and the firſt four vials of wrath are poured out, are ſlaughter in four great wars; and theſe wars are repreſented by four winds from the four corners of the earth. The firſt was an eaſt wind, the ſecond a weſt wind, the third a ſouth wind, and the fourth a north wind, with reſpect to the city of Rome, the metropolis of the old Roman empire. Theſe four plagues fell upon the third part of the earth, ſea, rivers, ſun, moon and ſtars; that is, upon the earth, ſea, rivers, ſun, moon and ſtars of the third part of the whole ſcene of theſe Prophecies of Daniel and John.

The plague of the eaſtern wind at the ſounding of the firſt trumpet, was to fall upon the earth; Revel. viii. 7, &c. that is, upon the nations of the Greek empire. Accordingly, after the death of Theodoſius the Great, the Goths, Sarmatians, Hunns, Iſaurians, and Auſtorian Moors invaded and miſerably waſted Greece, Thrace, Aſia minor, Armenia, Syria, Egypt, Lybia, and Illyricum, for ten or twelve years together.

The plague of the weſtern wind at the ſounding of the ſecond trumpet, was to fall upon the ſea, or weſtern empire, by means of a great mountain burning with fire caſt into it, and turning it into blood. Accordingly in the year 407, that empire began to be invaded by the Viſigoths, Vandals, Alans, Sueves, Burgundians, Oſtrogoths, Heruli, Quadi, Gepides; and by theſe wars it was broken into ten kingdoms, and miſerably waſted: And Rome it ſelf, the burning mountain, was beſieged and taken by the Oſtrogoths, in the beginning of theſe miſeries.

The plague of the ſouthern wind at the ſounding of the third trumpet, was to cauſe a great ſtar, burning as it were a lamp, to fall from Heaven upon the rivers and fountains of waters, the weſtern empire now divided into many kingdoms, and to turn them to wormwood and blood, and make them bitter. Accordingly Genſeric, the king of the Vandals and Alans in Spain, A. C. 427, entered Africa with an army of eighty thouſand men; where he invaded the Moors, and made war upon the Romans, both there and on the ſea coaſts of Europe, for fifty years together, almoſt without intermiſſion, taking Hippo A. C. 431, and Carthage the capital of Africa A. C. 439. In A. C. 455, with a numerous fleet and an army of three hundred thouſand Vandals and Moors, he invaded Italy, took and plundered Rome, Naples, Capua, and many other cities; carrying thence their wealth with the flower of the people into Africa: And the next year, A. C. 456, he rent all Africa from the empire, totally expelling the Romans. Then the Vandals invaded and took the iſlands of the Mediterranean, Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, Ebuſus, Majorca, Minorca, &c. and Ricimer beſieged the emperor Anthemius in Rome, took the city, and gave his ſoldiers the plunder, A. C. 472. The Viſigoths about the ſame time drove the Romans out of Spain: And now the weſtern emperor, the great ſtar which fell from Heaven, burning as it were a lamp, having by all theſe wars gradually loſt almoſt all his dominions, was invaded, and conquered in one year by Odoacer king of the Heruli, A. C. 476. After this the Moors revolted, A. C. 477, and weakned the Vandals by ſeveral wars, and took Mauritania from them. Theſe wars continued till the Vandals were conquered by Beliſarius, A. C. 534. and by all theſe wars Africa was almoſt depopulated, according to Procopius, who reckons that above five millions of men periſhed in them. So that Procopius tells us, it was next to a miracle for a traveller to ſee a man.

In pouring out the third vial it is ſaid: Thou art righteous, O Lord,———becauſe thou haſt judged thus: For they have ſhed the blood of thy ſaints and prophets, and thou haſt given them blood to drink, for they are worthy. How they ſhed the blood of ſaints, may be underſtood by the edicts of the emperor Honorius, procured by four biſhops ſent to him by a council of African biſhops, who met at Carthage, 14 June, A. C. 410. which made it death for any Africans to diſſent from the eſtabliſhed religion of their country. And here let it be remarked that theſe two were the firſt which made their meetings, and the meetings of all diſſenters, capital; for by hereticks in theſe edicts are meant all diſſenters, as is manifeſt by the following againſt Eureſius a Luciferian biſhop.

Impp. Arcad. & Honor. AA. Aureliano Proc. Africæ.

Hæreticorum vocabulo continentur, & latis adverſus eos ſanctionibus debent ſuccumbere, qui vel levi argumento a judicio Catholicæ religionis & tramite detecti fuerint deviare, &c. Dat. iii. Non. Sept. Conſtantinop. Olybrio & Probino Coſſ. A. C. 395.

The Greek emperor Zeno adopted Theodetic king of the Oſtrogoths to be his ſon, made him maſter of the horſe and Patricius, and conſul of Conſtantinople; and recommending to him the Roman people and ſenate, gave him the weſtern empire, and ſent him into Italy againſt Odoacer king of the Heruli. Theoderic thereupon led his nation into Italy, conquered Odoacer, and reigned over Italy, Sicily, Rhætia, Noricum, Dalmatia, Liburnia, Iſtria, and part of Suevia, Pannonia and Gallia. Whence Ennodius ſaid, in a Panegyric to Theodoric: Ad limitem ſuum Romana regna remeaſſe. Theoderic reigned with great prudence, moderation and felicity; treated the Romans with ſingular benevolence, governed them by their own laws, and reſtored their government under their ſenate and conſuls, he himſelf ſupplying the place of emperor, without aſſuming the title. Ita ſibi parentibus præfuit, faith Procopius, ut vere Imperatori conveniens decus nullum ipſi abeſſet: Juſtitiæ magnus ei cultus, legumque diligens cuſtodia: terras a vicinis barbaris ſervavit intactas, &c. Whence I do not reckon the reign of this king, amongſt the plagues of the four winds.

The plague of the northern wind, at the ſounding of the fourth trumpet, was to cauſe the ſun, moon and ſtars, that is, the king, kingdom and princes of the weſtern empire, to be darkned, and to continue ſome time in darkneſs. Accordingly Beliſarius, having conquered the Vandals, invaded Italy A. C. 535, and made war upon the Oſtrogoths in Dalmatia, Liburnia, Venetia, Lombardy, Tuſcany, and other regions northward from Rome, twenty years together. In this war many cities were taken and retaken. In retaking Millain from the Romans, the Oſtrogoths ſlew all the males young and old, amounting, as Procopius reckons, to three hundred thouſand, and ſent the women captives to their allies the Burgundians. Rome itſelf was taken and retaken ſeveral times, and thereby the people were thinned; the old government by a ſenate ceaſed, the nobles were ruined, and all the glory of the city was extinguiſhed: And A. C. 552, after a war of ſeventeen years, the kingdom of the Oſtrogoths fell; yet the remainder of the Oſtrogoths, and an army of Germans called in to their aſſiſtance, continued the war three or four years longer. Then enſued the war of the Heruli, who, as Anaſtaſius tells us, perimebant cunctam Italiam, ſlew all Italy. This was followed by the war of the Lombards, the fierceſt of all the Barbarians, which began A. C. 568, and laſted for thirty-eight years together; facta tali clade, ſaith Anaſtaſius, qualem a ſæculo nullus meminit; ending at laſt in the Papacy of Sabinian, A. C. 605, by a peace then made with the Lombards.

Thus by the plagues of the four winds, the empire of the Greeks was ſhaken, and the empire of the Latins fell; and Rome remained nothing more than the capital of a poor dukedom, ſubordinate to Ravenna, the ſeat of the exarchs.

The fifth trumpet ſounded to the wars, which the king of the South, as he is called by Daniel, made in the time of the end, in puſhing at the king who did according to his will. This plague began with the opening of the bottomleſs pit, which denotes the letting out of a falſe religion: The ſmoke which came out of the pit, ſignifying the multitude which embraced that religion; and the locuſts which came out of the ſmoke, the armies which came out of that multitude. This pit was opened, to let out ſmoke and locuſts into the regions of the four monarchies, or ſome of them. The king of theſe locuſts was the angel of the bottomleſs pit, being chief governor as well in religious as civil affairs, ſuch as was the caliph of the Saracens. Swarms of locuſts often ariſe in Arabia-fælix, and from thence infeſt the neighbouring nations: And ſo are a very fit type of the numerous armies of Arabians invading the Romans. They began to invade them A. C. 634, and to reign at Damaſcus A. C. 637. They built Bagdad A. C. 766, and reigned over Perſia, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, Africa and Spain. They afterwards loſt Africa to Mahades, A. C 910; Media, Hircania, Choraſan, and all Perſia, to the Dailamites, between the years 927 and 935: Meſopotamia and Miafarekin to Naſiruddaulas, A. C. 930; Syria and Egypt to Achsjid, A. C. 935. and now being in great diſtreſs, the caliph of Bagdad, A. C. 936, ſurrendred all the reſt of his temporal power to Mahomet the ſon of Rajici, king of Waſit in Chaldea, and made him emperor of emperors. So that

The whole time that the caliphs of the Saracens reignedwith a temporal dominion at Damaſcus and Bagdad together, was 300 years, viz. from the year 637 to the year 936 incluſive. Now locuſts live but five months; and therefore, for the decorum of the type, theſe locuſts are ſaid to hurt men five months and five months, as if they had lived about five months at Damaſcus, and again about five months at Bagdad; in all ten months, or 300 prophetic days, which are years.

The ſixth trumpet ſounded to the wars, which Daniel's king of the North made againſt the king abovementioned, who did according to his will. In theſe wars the king of the North, according to Daniel, conquered the empire of the Greeks, and alſo Judea, Egypt, Lybia, and Ethiopia: And by theſe conqueſts the empire of the Turks was ſet up, as may be known by the extent thereof. Theſe wars commenced A. C. 1258, when the four kingdoms of the Turks ſeated upon Euphrates, that of Armenia-major ſeated at Miyapharekin, Megarkin or Martyropolis, that of Meſopotamia ſeated at Moſul, that of all Syria ſeated at Aleppo, and that of Cappadocia ſeated at Iconium, were invaded by the Tartars under Hulacu, and driven into the weſtern parts of Aſia-minor, where they made war upon the Greeks, and began to erect the preſent empire of the Turks. Upon the ſounding of the ſixth trumpet, Revel. ix. 13, &c. John heard a voice from the four horns, &c. By the four horns of the golden altar, is ſignified the ſituation of the head cities of the ſaid four kingdoms, Miyapharekin, Moſul, Aleppo, and Iconium, which were in a quadrangle. They ſlew the third part of men, when they conquered the Greek empire, and took Conſtantinople, A. C. 1453. and they began to be prepared for this purpoſe, when Olub-Arſlan began to conquer the nations upon Euphrates, A. C. 1063. The interval is called an hour and a day, and a month, and a year, or 391 prophetic days, which are years. In the firſt thirty years, Olub-Arſlan and Melech-ſchah conquered the nations upon Euphrates, and reigned over the whole. Melechſchah died A. C. 1092, and was ſucceeded by a little child; and then this kingdom broke into the four kingdoms abovementioned.

A Diſſertation on Certainty.

I. I ſhall conſider the ſeveral ſorts of means, whereby we may be freed from doubt concerning any thing propos'd, and be as certain as 'tis poſſible for men to be, of the truth or falſhood, the good or evil of it.

II. I ſhall ſhew, which of thoſe means of information we have moſt reaſon to depend upon; that is, on which we may moſt ſafely venture to determine for the certainty of any matter.

III. And laſtly, I ſhall make ſome few inferences from this diſcourſe, by way of application. And now,

I. Firſt, For the means of information, &c.

Firſt, We may attain to certainty, concerning the truth or falſhood of ſeveral things, both in nature and religion, by the ſole evidence of our ſenſes. But then, we can attain to certainty this way, only as to ſuch things as are the objects of our ſenſes, and being plainly obvious to any of them, are therefore not to be diſputed. Thus we may certainly diſtinguiſh colours, by the ſight; ſounds, by hearing; matter of all ſorts, whether ſoft or hard, ſmooth or rough, &c. by the touch; ſcents, by ſmelling; and the reliſh of any thing, whether ſweet or bitter, &c. by taſting: And in ſuch inſtances as theſe, unleſs our ſenſes are extremely vitiated, or we are totally deprived of them, we cannot be deceived.

I am not ſpeaking now of madmen, or others that are worſe, who are reſolved to doubt of every thing they ſee, or hear, or feel, or ſmell, or taſte; for ſuch are not in a condition to be argued with, becauſe they will not be convinced of any thing, by the only proper means of knowledge in ſuch caſes.

My buſineſs, now, is only with ſuch perſons as have their ſenſes clear, and in a fit capacity for making ſuch diſcoveries as come within their verge and ſphere; and are willing to be determined by them in ſuch caſes. Such men as theſe, as they will readily believe, on one hand, concerning any objects of their ſenſes, that they are ſo, as thoſe ſenſes repreſent them; ſo they will not be perſuaded, on the other hand, that any propoſition can be true, concerning any matter obvious to ſenſe, and as to which their ſenſes cannot poſſibly deceive them, if ſuch a propoſition plainly thwarts and contradicts the undoubted evidence of their ſenſes.

I ſhall inſtance only in one caſe at preſent; and that in reference to the elements of bread and wine, made uſe of in the celebration of the holy ſupper of our Lord. Now, that theſe are bread and wine, and nothing elſe, before the words of conſecration are pronounc'd, is own'd by all, of all perſuaſions. The only queſtion in diſpute, is this; Whether the bread and wine retain their proper ſpecies, without any change or alteration in their nature, after conſecration?

It is indeed, confeſs'd, on all hands, that after conſecration, the elements are no longer to be look'd on as common bread and wine, nor to be put to any common uſe; though their being conſecrated to a ſacred uſe does not hinder, but that they ſtill continue to be bread and wine, their kind or nature no way changed, though appropriated to an holy uſe by conſecration. The deſign and end of conſecration, whatever words or geſtures are pronounced or uſed therein, is only to appropriate the things ſo conſecrated to this or that peculiar uſe; but it can work no change or alteration in the nature of them, from what they were before. If it can, or does, in one reſpect, why ſhould it not do ſo in others alſo? For inſtance; If the bread and wine are by the words and form of conſecration chang'd into the very fleſh and blood of Chriſt, as the Papiſts pretend, why ſhould not water be ſo changed, at leaſt into ſomething elſe, in baptiſm? For that is conſecrated too; ſo that, of common, it becomes uncommon water: And our Saviour's words are uſed in one, as well as in the other; that is, the very words he utter'd at the inſtitution of each ſacrament, are ſtill retained and uſed, in the conſecration of the bread and wine in one, and of the water in the other. And I can ſee no reaſon, why, if ſuch a tranſubſtantiation, or change of the ſubſtance of the elements be cauſed by conſecration in one ſacrament, it ſhould not alſo be alike effected in the other. Nay, if conſecration has ſuch a power on things animate, why ſhould it not be ſo effectual likewiſe, as to perſons, who, we are aſſured, will one day undergo a change, from what they are at preſent, frail and mortal, to perfect and immortal beings? Why ſhould not the conſecration of a perſon to ſuch ſacred purpoſes, as prieſts and biſhops are, be as well ſuppoſed to change his nature, and make him ſomething more than man, as well as the nature of thoſe ſenſeleſs elements, ſo as to make them very Chriſt, and conſequently, God, fit to be worſhipped and adored?

But, ſays our Saviour, of the bread, This is my body; and of the wine, This is my blood, Matt. xxvi. 26, &c. Mark xiv. 22, &c. Luke xxii. 19, 20. that very body and blood which were broken and ſhed for us: And ſhall we not believe him? Yes, by all means, in ſuch a ſenſe as he intended when he ſpake the words, but not in ſuch a ſenſe as we know to be impoſſible, either for our Saviour to intend, or the nature of the things to bear. Our Saviour, then, was preſent viſibly; the diſciples ſaw him ſitting with them at the table, if they then made uſe of any; they ſaw and felt and taſted both the bread and wine, and knew them to be ſuch, by the evidence of all thoſe ſenſes; they ſaw him take the bread, and break it, and the wine, and pour it out; they heard him ſpeak the words of conſecration, and then received the conſecrated elements from his hands; and they did eat and drink them, even after conſecration, though not as common bread and wine, yet ſtill as bread and wine, the ſame for ſubſtance as they were before. Nor could they poſſibly conceive them to be otherwiſe, becauſe their ſenſes could not be ſo altered on a ſudden, as to think that fleſh and blood, only by virtue of three words pronounced, which they ſaw, and felt, and taſted to be bread and wine but juſt before. And if their ſenſes were not altered, neither could they be deceived any more after conſecration, than they were before. In ſhort; they ſaw our Saviour ſitting ſtill among them, and heard him ſpeak of divers matters; they followed him to judgment, and to death, and ſaw that ſelf-ſame body, which was preſent with him over night, the next day hanging on the croſs, between the bodies of two thieves; and as they could not be deceived in one, ſo neither could they in the other. Therefore, upon the whole, as they had reaſon to believe their ſenſes in this matter, ſo have we, as well as in all other inſtances, of things that are ſo plainly obvious to ſenſe, as theſe are found to be. And ſo much may ſuffice, for the firſt means of information mentioned, whereby we may attain a certainty of the truth or falſhood of any thing propoſed, the witneſs of our ſenſes.

The ſecond ſort of means I mentioned, is demonſtration. And this is either ſenſible, or rational; that is, ſuch demonſtration, by which we are convinced of any matter by the external evidence of any of our ſenſes; or ſuch, whereby we are convinced by the internal force and power of reaſon. To give an inſtance of each ſort;

As to the firſt, If any perſon ſhould affirm, that one and the ſelf-ſame body is, or may be, in ſeveral places at one time: And this is the doctrine of the real preſence, eſpouſed by the Church of Rome: To them that know the nature of a body, that it is ſuch as is and cannot but be circumſcribed by place, the falſhood of ſuch an affirmation is ſo manifeſt, as not to ſtand in need of any ſenſible demonſtration to evince it. For, reaſon of itſelf will eaſily convince them, that what is circumſcribed by place, can be but in one place at one time; and that this is true of all corporeal ſubſtance whatſoever. But, for perſons of a lower ſize, who may be more eaſily impoſed on by the ſubtilties of men of parts and learning, though they cannot prove againſt them, that ſuch an affirmation muſt be falſe, by dint of reaſoning; yet they may do it by the help of ocular demonſtration. For, when they ſee all bodies whatſoever ſo circumſcribed by place, that upon the leaſt removal of any body, of fleſh, or any other ſubſtance, to another place, it is no longer to be found in the place wherein it ſtood before; they may, and cannot but conclude, againſt ſuch an affirmation, that it muſt needs be falſe, as having the utmoſt proof, of which the nature of the thing is capable, that it cannot poſſibly be true. And,

As to the other ſort; If any ſhould affirm, That what is real bread, is alſo real fleſh, and what is real wine, is at the ſelf-ſame time the real blood of any perſon; ſo that both theſe different ſpecies are actually contained under, and exhibited in one and the ſame form and ſubſtance, of which no other change or alteration is ſuppoſed to have been made, than the bare conſecration of the element is capable of making: The falſhood of ſuch an affirmation is eaſily demonſtrable from reaſon, and the ſettled nature of the things themſelves. For, though it be confeſs'd, that God, who has Almighty Power, can at his pleaſure change and alter things, from one form or ſubſtance to another; yet he was never known to work ſuch miracles as theſe, to give any ſingle ſubſtance two ſuch different natures, as bread and fleſh, and wine and blood are known to be: Nor can it be ſuppoſed he ſhould: becauſe we muſt ſuppoſe him, in ſo doing, to be guilty of exerting his Omnipotence, very often, to no purpoſe, which he never did, nor ever will. Beſides, according to this doctrine, which is called conſubſtantiation, the conſecrated elements are bread and wine, and yet not bread and wine; fleſh and blood, and yet not fleſh and blood, at one and the ſame time: Which are ſuch palpable contradictions as Omnipotence itſelf cannot produce. So that, to believe this doctrine, is to go againſt the cleareſt evidence, not only of our ſenſes, but our reaſon alſo. For to our ſenſes it is manifeſt, that the elements are bread and wine, and nothing elſe, even after conſecration; and to our reaſon it is every whit as plain, that if the conſecrated elements are bread and wine, they cannot be fleſh and blood: And to believe them to be both, is to believe them to be neither. And this may ſerve to ſhew, how we may attain to certainty, as to the truth or falſhood of any propoſition, by demonſtration.

The third, and laſt means of information, whereby, I ſaid, we may attain to certainty, as to the truth or falſhood, the good or evil, of any thing propoſed, is, the teſtimony of others, on whoſe veracity and faithfulneſs we may, and ought to reſt.

Now, the teſtimony of others to any matter, is either oral, that is, by word of mouth; or Scriptural, that is, by writing. And the validity or invalidity of either of theſe kinds of teſtimony, is to be judged of by the quality, and other circumſtances of their authors.

All teſtimony, therefore, with which we either are, or can be any way concerned, is either human, or divine. As to the former, human teſtimony, this is as much inferior to divine, as man is inferior to God; and the credit given to it muſt bear a due proportion to its author; all juſt allowances being made for incapacity, deſign and intereſt, whereby he may be rendered either unable, or unwilling, to inform us fully and ſincerely, in every reſpect. So that all teſtimony that is merely human, though it is the beſt means of information we can have, as to moſt human affairs; yet, either through the incapacity of the perſon that gives it, or by means of ſome deſign, or intereſt of his own, that he might aim at, and be carrying on, whilſt he is giving an account of things, it cannot be infallible, but may deceive us: And we cannot certainly determine, concerning the truth or falſhood, the good or evil of any thing, upon the ſole authority of any human teſtimony whatſoever. I ſpeak this, chiefly, with reſpect to moral things; for as to ſuch as are merely natural or human, we may, and ought to credit the relations of ſuch authors, whether given by word of mouth, or in writing, of whoſe veracity and faithfulneſs we have no cauſe to doubt, and who give us ſuch accounts of things from their own knowledge and experience of them.

But, as to all moral and Divine Affairs, no teſtimony can be deemed infallible, but that which is Divine. By which I mean, the laws and teſtimony that God has given, concerning moral good and evil, and to all Sacred Truths, either by himſelf immediately, or by men inſpired by him to declare his nature, and his will, in order to our knowledge of the former, and to excite our juſt obedience to the latter. And ſince the veracity and faithfulneſs of God are infinite; ſo that, whatever comes from him muſt needs be true, and he will let us want no knowledge, either of his nature, or his will, that we are capable of, and can be of any uſe towards the promotion of our preſent and eternal welfare: And ſince he can have no deſign in any thing he tells us, but only to promote our good, nor any intereſt to ſerve, but what is more our own than his; it follows, that we may, with the utmoſt ſafety and aſſurance, depend upon his word, for the truth, or good, or evil of any matter: Becauſe we know him to be ſo juſt and good, ſo true and faithful, that he neither will, nor can deceive us. And this leads me,

II. In the ſecond place, to ſhew, which of theſe ſeveral means of information we have moſt reaſon to depend upon, that is, on which we may moſt ſafely venture to determine for the certainty of any matter.

And firſt, as to our ſenſes, their evidence extends but to few moral things; and moſt of thoſe, whoſe truth or falſhood, good or evil, they can inform us of, are but of little moment: And as to thoſe that are of the greateſt moment, with which they have any thing to do, they may, in ſeveral inſtances deceive us, and either biaſs, or corrupt our judgment. For if in natural things, ſuch as pain and pleaſure, we may be miſtaken, as we too often are, while we judge of one or the other according to the evidence our ſenſes give and determine pain to be an evil, when, as it is circumſtantiated, it may be good and wholſome for us, and pleaſure to be good, when the circumſtances that attend it may make it very evil; much more may we be miſtaken, if we paſs judgment at a venture, as our ſenſes are affected, as to moral good and evil. In ſhort; though our ſenſes may come in for evidence, and may determine our judgment, as to the truth or falſhood of any thing propoſed, that is an object of, and plainly obvious to them; yet the inſtances are very few, if any, in which they are to be received as evidence, whereby we may determine for or againſt the moral good or evil of the things propoſed: Becauſe they are too apt to be partial to their own ſide, ſo as to call evil good, and good evil, according as they find themſelves immediately affected.

And, ſecondly, as to demonſtration, there are ſeveral doctrines of eternal verity, to which this cannot reach; ſuch as the doctrine of a trinity of perſons in the unity of the Godhead; and that of the incarnation of the ſon of God, and the union of the Divine and human natures in his ſingle Perſon: Which human reaſon can no more demonſtrate, than a man can tell the depth of the ſea, in thoſe place that are unfathomable. And we find, by ſad experience, that mens endeavours in this way, have done no ſervice, but have been rather very prejudicial to theſe doctrines, by rendring them both more abſtruſe and unintelligible, and ſo more hard to be believed, than otherwiſe they are, while our endeavours to eſtabliſh them are founded on the word of God alone, in which they are expreſly taught.

And therefore, laſtly, teſtimony, and of all teſtimony that which is Divine, is the ſureſt, and moſt perfect means of information, as to all Sacred Truths, and all moral duties; whereby alone, we can be certain of the truth or falſhood, the good or evil of any thing propoſed, as a matter of religion. For this coming from that God, who cannot lie, and neither will nor can deceive us; we may, with the utmoſt ſafety and aſſurance, nay, we muſt depend upon it, and be determined by it.

And now, to us, who can pretend to no immediate revelation, or inſpiration from above, as the holy Patriarchs and Prophets, the Apoſtles and ſome of the firſt Chriſtians had; the written word of God is our ſafeſt and moſt perfect guide to truth, as containing and preſcribing all things neceſſary to be known, believed, and practiſed by us. For ſo the Apoſtle tells us; 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. All ſcripture is given by inſpiration of God, and is profitable, that is, ſufficient, for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs: that the man of God may be made perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works. As if he had ſaid, The written word of God contains and teaches all things neceſſary for men to know, believe, and do, in order to their preſent and eternal welfare. And now,

III. The inferences I ſhall make from this diſcourſe, by way of application, are briefly, theſe.

Firſt, That no other means of information, beſides the written word of God, can give perfect ſatisfaction, as to matters of religion. For if any other means of information could do this, the Scriptures had been needleſs, or, at leaſt, of no great moment to us; and the pains of writing, and the care that has been taken to preſerve them, are both to very little purpoſe. But the uncertainty and imperfection of all other means of Sacred Knowledge made it abſolutely neceſſary, that ſuch a certain, plain, and perfect rule of faith and practice ſhould be written and promulgated, to which men might have recourſe on all occaſions, and by which they might be throughly inſtructed in all inſtances of neceſſary faith and duty.

To this purpoſe, the Evangeliſt Luke informs us, that the principal, if not the only reaſon of his giving his Theophilus a written narrative of our Saviour's life and doctrines, was, that he might have a more certain knowledge of thoſe matters, than he could expect to have by any other means of information. It ſeemed good to me, ſays he, having had perfect underſtanding of all things from the very firſt to write unto thee in order, moſt excellent Theophilus: that thou mightſt know the certainty of thoſe things, wherein thou haſt been inſtructed; Luke i. 3, 4. He had, it ſeems, been inſtructed in ſeveral points of Chriſtian faith and duty already, and perhaps he might believe them without any more ado: But leſt he ſhould be in doubt, concerning any neceſſary matter, from a ſuſpicion of either the veracity, or faithfulneſs, or, at leaſt, the capacity of his inſtructors; or leſt he ſhould afterwards forget any neceſſary truth he had been told, or, for want of a reſidentiary monitor, that ſhould be always ready at hand to remind him of his duty, he ſhould at any time become unmindful of it, ſo as to neglect, or act contrary to it in any inſtance: To prevent theſe inconveniencies, and to ſet and keep him right as to all Sacred fundamentals, he gives him ſuch a hiſtory of all affairs in writing, on whoſe truth and faithfulneſs he might depend, and to which he might always have recourſe, both for his more certain information, as to all things needful to be known, believed, and done, in order to ſalvation; and alſo to ſatisfy his doubts, if he ſhould labour under any, concerning any of thoſe things, in which he had been before, or ſhould afterwards be inſtructed.

Secondly, we may infer from this diſcourſe, that the written word of God is of itſelf a perfect and ſufficient rule of faith and practice; and the only means of certainty, as to the truth or falſhood, the good or evil of all moral things: And eſpecially, as to all Sacred myſteries of religion.

And the third inference, with which I ſhall conclude, is this; That, therefore, we ought, as to all Sacred Matters, to ſubject both our ſenſes to that unerring rule and ſtandard; ſo as, without doubting or gainſaying, to believe and do whatever we find to be expreſly, or by undoubted conſequence inculcated therein, as neceſſary to be believed or done, in order to our happineſs.

Thus, courteous reader, We have brought this Great and Laborious Work to a concluſion, in the manner it was propoſed; and with that care and fidelity as ſuch a uſeful and pious deſign requires; and it may be ſuppoſed, with the approbation and eſteem of the devout and numerous ſubſcribers thereto.

As for our own part; let it ſuffice now, once for all, to aſſure you, That we have ſtudied theſe Sacred Books conconſcientiouſly, neither wreſting the Text for the ſupport of human inventions, nor paſſing over any doubtful or obſcure Scripture, at leaſt, which might appear ſo to us, without a clear expoſition, ſupported by reaſon, and collateral Texts of Holy Writ. And though the differences among Chriſtians in the interpretation of Divine Revelation, have obliged us to run frequently into Critical Obſervations, perchance of too nice a nature to be readily comprehended by the generality of readers: Yet, even here, it has been our chief care to engage the attention with a familiar ſtile, abſtract from the unintelligible terms of the ſchool-men, and with ſuch pious inferences, as may ſerve, if not to make good diſputants, to promote virtue and Chriſtian knowledge. In a word, God, unto whom all hearts are open, all deſires known, and from whom no ſecrets are hid; knoweth that in all this Work, my heart has not willingly or deſignedly ſwerved from the true meaning of his Holy Word: Thy Word, O God! is a lanthorn unto my feet, and a light unto my paths: For wherein I have copied after other authors, their word was never admitted a place under the Sacred Text, till my conſcience had ſtudied it well, and was ſatisfied of its veracity and goodneſs. For as my delight is in the law of the Lord, and am convinced that the only way for a man to cleanſe himſelf from ſin, is by the word of the Lord, ſo my deſire, God will bear me witneſs, has been not to puzzle, nor deceive, but to inſtruct and confirm my readers in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, by a plain, clear, ſincere and intelligible expoſition of his Divine Will. Therefore, Let us unite in heart and mind, and never begin to read, nor finiſh our meditations on God's Holy Word, till we have craved his bleſſing in the words of this excellent collect, allotted for the ſecond Sunday of Advent:

> Bleſſed Lord, who haſt cauſed all holy Holy Scriptures to be writen for our learning; Grant that we may in ſuch wiſe hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digeſt them, that by patience and comfort of thy Holy Word, we may embrace and ever hold faſt the bleſſed hope of everlaſting life, which thou haſt given us, in our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

GLORY TO GOD ALONE.

FINIS.